"This is the time of year when usually everyone is out, coming to town, having fun, enjoying a traditional Saturday night," Lewis Stokes told the AFRO.

"But it's been like this all summer. Practically no one is out at night. Oh, you'll find a few, but Tallahassee has 15,000 of us.

"This bunch is nothing to the many folks who used to be in town on Saturday. They just aren't riding the buses. The country people have gone home by now."

THIS REPORTER followed the main bus line just to see. It is the A and M Frenchtown line. We started in the center of the city at Monroe and Park, a terminal where domestics and other workers must transfer to go to "their section" of town.

The benches beneath the trees, usually crowded, were empty.

SOON THE BUS came rattling along, its seats empty, its interior hollow. The driver stopped awhile, laid his head on his arms and appeared to go to sleep. Pretty soon he awoke, put the vehicle in gear, struggled off down the street.

Adams and Park is another transfer terminal. No one was there, no one wanted to catch the bus. It is a certainty that if anyone needed a ride he would get this bus here.

This is the heart of town where they must change and get this A. and M. Frenchtown bus to go home.

At Jefferson and Adams, at Pensacola and Adams in "Capitol Center" which is the square upon which are the white supreme court building, the important state buildings, there was not one sound except the crickets in the great live oak trees. No one, white or colored, was on the street.

"IN NORMAL TIMES this Frenchtown A. and M. bus line would pay for all the 15 other lines in operation in the city. They could always depend on the students to ride when they return in the fall.

The morning domestics going to work and returning in the evening and the Saturday crowd always filled the buses on this line.

But now they have only one bus operating. It just goes around and around. "The driver rests anywhere because he will be ahead of schedule since he has had to make no stops," explained Mr. Stokes, a life long Tallahassee citizen.

"The bus company can not survive without the students. Now the driver tries to encourage children to ride free, to pretend to the public that somebody is riding the bus. But you see, not even the children are riding."

THE AFRO followed the bus down into the bond subdivision where it was reported one or two people would board the bus.

One woman did. She was about 55 and she had a 25 pound sack of potatoes, a great bundle of what appeared to be soiled clothes to be washed. She dragged heavily on the bus, sat up front near the driver.

Shortly, the bus stopped again after about eight country blocks ride. Another lady got on. About a mile further on the route, a man got on. He was white.

"Let's see why these ladies decided to ride the bus," I said.

"No need to ask," Mr. Stokes said. "You can see when one of them gets off why she is riding."

SURE ENOUGH, when she did get off the bus about two miles later, she heaved the 25 pound sack of spuds over her shoulder, dragged the heavy bundle in her other hand and shuffled down a dark country road. No one could walk and carry that load she had.

"No need to ask the other lady either," Mr. Stokes said. "She couldn't tell you. She doesn't know the why of anything, doesn't know about the boycott. She can't read or write. She can not understand what you say and I don't think she can talk at all. She has been that way since she was a child."

I took it that she had the IQ of a child about five years old.

"WE KNOW everybody who gets on this bus," Mr. Stokes said. "Sometimes the driver brings along his kids hoping to make somebody think the buses are full. There are one or two people who get on whom we do not worry about. They can't influence anyone. There are some people who if they get on, that's a good reason for her friends and relatives not to ride."

"If anyone is seen on the buses, in a few hours all his neighbors will know it."

"When the bus goes through the campus, if anyone is on there, the students sometimes jeer and hoot."

We continued on the route until we passed through a busy section where the Royal Palace dance hall is located.

A minister stood preaching to ten or twelve people. Young folks were crowded outside the dance hall, a private bus with the orchestra was waiting outside. It was after 8 p.m. when the dance should have started.

"They're waiting for some more folks to come before they start," Mr. Stokes said. "But this boycott is good for the Tallahassee people. They've gone home, have taken their baths, and are saving their money instead of crowding the dance floor and drinking moonshine. We are a dry county, you know, and there's plenty of moonshine to be had on Saturday night. But now practically everybody is in bed."

"Let's go around the route one more time," I said. "This is not fun but it is a joy to see how people step back and let the bus go on by. Then they get in the road and walk behind it."

We went around the seven-mile course again. No riders at all this time. The town was getting more quiet. Everything was silent; just the bus kept going around and around.

This bus was the only one on duty in the entire city of 75,000 people. Soon it stopped and the driver went home to bed.

The police chief said that most came voluntarily after being requested to report.

He said some came in their own cars but some were transported in police cars.

In the meantime, the Inter-Civic Council has been required to turn over its records after a subpaena called upon them to be used as evidence in the trial set for Oct. 4.

Civil Rights Violated

Investigate Cops In Tallahassee, Governor Asked

Courier P.5 Pittsburgh Pa.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Gov. LeRoy Collins has been asked to investigate action of local police as a number of Negro citizens are being questioned in connection with the current bus protest.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter-Civic Council, in a wire to the Governor charged that city police are violating the civil rights of citizens.

The Rev. Mr. Steele claimed that during the past few days, as the date for the trial of 11 persons arrested for driving in the car pool nears, "a number of Negro citizens have been taken from their homes to the police department for questioning in connection with the bus situation."

Sat. 10-6-56

Police Chief Stoutamire said Negroes are being questioned, most of them witnesses to arrests of protest car pool drivers.

ICC Diary

Afro-American Baltimore Md. Sat. 8-4-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla — Here is a complete chronological report ("ICC Diary") of major events that have transpired since the bus boycott began here May 26 of this year, issued last week by the Inter-Civic Council:

May 26—Arrest of girls.

May 27—Cross burned in front of girls' residence.

May 28—Florida A. and M. University students originate bus resistance movement.

May 29—Members of Tallahassee Civic League and interdenominational Ministerial Alliance (nine men) visited offices of City Manager Arvah Hopkins and Bus Manager Carter seeking relief. Carter told the group he ded not care if colored people ever rode the buses.

May 29 — 8:30 p.m. — Inter-Civic Council of Tallahassee organized simultaneously voted to refrain from riding buses.

JUNE 3 — THE GROUP WAS CAUTIONED very forcefully against all violence and in consequence everyone pledged to approach all adversaries with tolerance and love. Citizens encouraged to add cars to pool and contribute as liberal amounts as possible to fund.

June 6—Reference to recently rendered decision at Montgomery relative to desegregation on intrastate buses reinforced enthusiasm of council members. Report of the reaction of the city commission to the ICC's proposals was read.

The fact that city commission was bold enough to claim that "courtesy" towards all colored people is already in effect amazed audience in that practically every colored bus rider can relate some humiliating, embarrassing, degrading experience on a bus.

JUNE 10 — SIXTY-THREE cars and two station wagons registered with pool. Riders advised by all means not to pay drivers. All contributions should be made directly to the ICC. Encouraging remarks made by a representative of Congress of Racial Equality (CORE).

June 13—The number of cars in the pool has increased to 73. It seems as if drivers in pool are being unnecessarily agitated by police department.

Arrests have been made for extremely small violations that would certainly have been ignored during the period prior to the protest.

Proof that city commission can change conditions of the bus company's franchise evidenced through increase of bus company's payment required by city reduced from regular rate of 3 per cent to ½ of 1 per cent.

Various speakers from floor praised ministers and educators who are fulfilling duties and living up to their moral obligations to guide their people both spiritually and intellectually in the direction of righteousness and justice.

THE PEOPLE VOTED unanimously again to continue in the protest against unfair practices as have been dealt out on the buses.

June 17—Fines were paid for car pool drivers intimidated by police. Drivers urged repeatedly to observe as carefully as possible all traffic regulations so as to avoid this expense on the part of the council.

City commission is still practically refusing to recognize the elected leaders of ICC and continues to attempt to negotiate with a few "chosen" colored people who, it is rumored, have received some personal favors from certain whites and are therefore protecting their own selfish interests.

Due to this, various articles in white papers have implied that the colored people are divided. However, from all with a reading of the Bill of Rights and excerpts from the Declaration of Independence. Many papers were criticized for the nonobjective coverage of situation here.

Some editorials stated that colored people are being "unreasonable" in their demand for integration. A speaker from the floor brought attention to the fact that segregation on public conveyances is in effect in only about ¼ of the country and asked if ¾ of the country is being "unreasonable."

Other criticisms were expressed about Governor Collins' assertion that the entire movement had been spearheaded by outsiders and the NAACP.

JULY 8—MORE PROPOSALS were submitted to the council by the city commission. Most felt that these were in essence the same as those that had been considered before. However the proposals were voted on separately.

The proposals on courtesy and bus drivers were accepted, while those on the seating of passengers and the interracial committee were rejected. A committee was to be formed consisting of six white members and six colored members.

Ten colored people were to be elected by the ICC, six of whom would be appointed to the interracial committee. The group believed this technique was especially designed to exclude the Rev. Messrs. Steele, Rollins, Dupont and the like from the committee.

JULY 11—TOWARD THE END of this evening's program the Rev. Mr. Steele, who had been absent from the two preceding meetings because of business engagements out of town, entered and the audience stood cheering for approximately seven minutes. Someone said:

38b

'COME AND WALK in Tallahassee,' prays the Rev. Ulysses Smith at the regular Sunday night mass meeting in the Bethel A. M. E. Church.

"Every coward in the world should have been there to see how much the people love a man who stands up fearlessly for what he believes is right and speaks his real sentiments irrespective of the cost."

In general, the people here are very proud of their ministers, most of whom have proved that their religion is more than form, ceremony and empty talk.

JULY 12—FOR SOME UNKNOWN reason city officials expected the proposals to be reconsidered again July 11, although they had not contacted the executive board of the ICC. Consequently they angrily announced that they had "slammed doors on further negotiations."

At this point the papers also described efforts on the part of the mayor to encourage the board of control to exert its influence by curbing the participation of Florida A. and M. University professors and their wives in the "boycott."

Many think that this is just another threat in an attempt to intimidate the colored people.

One man said:

"Instead of becoming intimidated, I am becoming disgusted. Not only am I now fighting for a fair deal on a bus, but I am also helping to ward off fascism. In a democratic country one should not be told where not to go, what not to say and what to ride."

July 13—There has been much talk here of a "ride-the-bus" campaign among the whites, so as to insure some patronage for the company when it resumes operation Aug. 2.

COLORED PEOPLE SUSPECT that the campaign organizers have not found as much interest as expected. Otherwise such enticements as free rides on the first day, free refreshments and coffee on buses would probably not be necessary.

July 19—Legal moves made by the city commission were made to cripple the car pool operation: Rev. Mr. Steele stated that if there is a law to arrest us for driving our own cars, buying our own gas and picking up our own friends, then we'll test the law. He promised drivers the best legal talent the nation has to offer.

KEEPS GOING—Johnny Cook, car-pool driver, who has been arrested three times, vows to keep his car in operation getting bus boycotters to and from work.

Bus Protest Is Still Strong, Leaders Say

By WILLIAM GORDON
Managing Editor, Atlanta Daily World

Two top leaders in the Tallahassee bus protest were in Atlanta Tuesday on special business and indicated that the feeling against segregation in their city "is just as strong as ever if not even stronger."

Rev. C. J. Steele and Dan Speed of the Inter-Civic Council of Tallahassee are content that the drive against segregation by Negroes in Tallahassee and in many other part of the South will continue.

"There has been no let up on our part in Tallahassee, even though police officials have arrested and fined many of our people," Rev Steele said. He said Negroes are still staying off the buses in Tallahassee, and that the feeling is they will continue to do so, as long as there is segregation.

"Many people don't know we didn't take a compromise," he said. "We felt that as long as there is a vacant seat on a bus, no one should be forced to stand, whether Negro or white."

The protest grew out of an incident last spring involving two women students at Florida A. and M. University. The young women boarded the bus near the campus and found that the only seat vacant was one designated for white people.

WOMEN ARRESTED

The two women attempted to take the seat, but the driver of the bus asked them to move. They did so, but asked for a drefund of their money. The driver refused and later called the police charging they had been disturbing the peace.

The incident set off a city-wide protest by Negro citizens segregated seating on buses in Tallahassee.

Rev. Steele said that eleven of their members in the Inter-Civic Council had been subpoened on charges they were operating "for hire" vehicles in the city without a license.

Trials for the eleven have been set for Thursday morning in Tallahassee.

The Inter-Civic Council has been operating a motor pool from which cars have been dispatched to transport people to and from their work during the protest.

ASKED FOR RECORDS

City officials in Tallahassee have been using various means to break the protest, Rev. Steele and Mr. Speed said. The latest move has been to ask protest leaders to surrender their books and records.

"Whatever the outcome, we will continue to stay off the buses, and if necessary we will walk rather than ride, "Rev. Steele stated.

Since city officials have hit at the car pool, Inter-Civic Council leaders said many Negroes have brought their own automobiles, rather than go back on the buses.

Recent reports indicate that the bus company is operating at a "tremendous" loss. Others sources reveal that unless more than sixty percent of the Negroes go back to riding the buses, it will be impossible for the company to stay in business.

NO EFFECT

A drive had been spearheaded make possible free passes for servants and other workers. They were out to housewives and others employing Negroes, making it possible for many to ride the buses with charge. The move failed to take effect.

Many white people, Rev. Steele said, are giving free transportation to their maids and other help. They usually pick them up in their automobilies, take them and return them at the end of the day.

The Inter-Civic Council is still in need of funds to continue to operate, Rev. Steele said. Headquarters for the Inter-Civic Council are located at 803 Floral St., Tallahassee, Fla.

While in Atlanta Tuesday, the leader met with the Baptist Union, a group of ministers representing most of the churches in this area. The Union gave them $100.

They Are Fed Up!

Courier 8/4

In Tallahasee, Fla., where the Negro boycott of the city buses is entering its sixth week, the City Commission has voted to restore service on a segregated basis and provide police protection "for any Negroes who want to ride."

Mayor Fred Winterle agreed with the commission that they were "sick and tired" of further negotiations with the Negro Inter-civic Council, adding: "We're fed up."

Pittsburgh Pa.

The extent to which the Tallahassee City Commission and the Mayor are "sick and tired" and "fed up" is nothing compared to the feeling of the erstwhile Negro passengers.

The latter have been "sick and tired" and "fed up" for years with discourtesy, rudeness, insult and violence on the buses in their home town.

Sat. 8-4-56

They are asking merely that Negro passengers (paying the same fare) be accorded the same consideration and treatment as others, no more and no less.

If Tallahassee's city fathers cannot do that, then let them support the bus company themselves.

Florida Boycotters Blast Gore

Afro-American

By Elizabeth Murphy Oliver

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — "We are certain of victory."

"The opposition doesn't have a legal leg to stand on."

This was a statement made by Francisco Rodriquez, NAACP attorney from Tampa, Fla., addressing a capacity audience at a mass meeting at Bethel Baptist Church here, Wednesday night.

trials scheduled for Thursday, had been postponed until Oct.

Baltimore Md.

The rally is considered the citizens' answer to an ultimatum issued by President George M. Gore Jr. of Florida A. and M. University to faculty members who are supporting the bus boycott.

Sat. 9-29-56

Faculty members present at the annual meeting of FAMU staff told the AFRO Mr. Gore threatened to fire any teacher or university employee who supports the boycott movement.

An officer of the Inter-Civic Council quoted Dr. Gore as telling the teachers:

"Either you are loyal to the university or loyal to something out there.

"Cast your lot with this ship or get off. You can't be loyal to both."

He is further quoted as saying participation by faculty members in the boycott is embarrassing the university.

ON THURSDAY, the Rev. Charles Kinzie Steele met with the university president. Later he issued a statement to the local press and made a statement over a local radio station, WTAL.

"As president of the Inter-civic Council," he said, "I cannot go along with any effort by anyone toward making a political football out of our local university."

The minister said he is of the opinion President Gore has wisely kept the university officially out of the boycott.

He added, however, "The boycott movement continues."

EARLIER DR. GORE told the AFRO:

"No faculty or staff member who works with the Inter-Civic Council will be fired or molested by the administration or the Board of Control.

"I have never heard the Board discuss the matter of the bus boycott at all.

"They have never discussed race in any respect. They are not that kind of people.

"It is the legislature that bothers me," he said. "I am interested in getting money for the school. Since this has come up, I am worried.

He further said he is not asking the students to resume patronizing the bus.

"It is the hope of the better-thinking people of both racial groups that the matter may be brought to a conclusion for the best interest of and respectiw, best interests and respect for the human dignity of all.

"It is to everyone's advantage. Many are suffering; many are going bankrupt."

The tiral delay was granted by Judge John A. Rudd on request of City Solicitor Edward J. Hill.

Dr. M. C. Williams, executive secretary of the Inter-Civic Council, stated:

"I don't think they have a legal leg to stand on. I think we may lose in the Municipal Court, but upon appeal we are certain of victory. We plan to to carry it to the highest court in the land if necessary."

Rodriquez said, at the mass meeting held by the council:

"You know you are right. The state looks upon you. The world looks upon you. It is my hope that every vestige of segregation is removed from the city of Tallahassee."

"I HOPE that the germ you have incubated here in Tallahassee will affect and spread from Pensacola to Key West.

"We must learn to fight with the weapons of the period: Don't talk too much at the wrong time; feed your brother, he will learn to feed you; desire your freedom now, we can not wait.

"The formula is legislation, litigation. The time of compromise with those of us who are against us is over. Those leaders who work against the right and us will be exposed," he concluded.

THE PROTEST movement was started last May by the students of A and M after the arrest of two A and M coeds who sat beside a white woman on a city bus when there were no other seats available.

This occurred on the A and M-Frenchtown route, which is predominately colored

The students voted to refrain from riding the buses after the arrest of the girls and a subsequent cross burning on the lawn of the residence where the girls were living.

The protest quickly spread to the community and was organized by the Ministerial Alliance.

SINCE THE inception of the protest, many University personnel have participated actively in the support of the movement.

Some five weeks ago, 15 or 20 active university professors, mostly key personnel, were called in separately by the president.

When asked by reporters as what went on at those meetings, these professors gave a terse "no comment." However, it is generally held that they were were given essentially the same ultimatum that was given the general body.

THE INTERCIVIC Council named certain faculty members as unsympathetic toward the boycott.

Dean of Women Edna Calhoun; J. Luther Thomas, librarian; H. M. Efferson, dean of the college; G. W. Conoly, alumni secretary; A. S. Parks, history and economics instructor; and M. S. Thomas, dean of the school of engineering.

Dean Efferson made six statements for the press, but requested they be struck out, after stating that whatever he said the press would be twisted.

He finally said he could be quoted as saying: "I have no comment."

EFFERSON HAS been accused by the council as saying riding in the back of the bus didn't make him feel he was a second-class citizen. He is also said to have declared that he was not going to the mass meetings, that he did not approve of them and that the "sensible people" should handle the situation.

He is reported to have said the groups should settle the dispute without boycott, sit at the table and solve the problem in a more reasonable way."

Dean of Women Calhoun stated:

"I devote myself to my job entirely. I have been out of it (the boycott). They have done well in carrying the thing along. I was not in it to begin with and I am not in it now. I don't know why they would list me.

"I have not been interested in it. I nor anyone has tried to keep the girls (coeds) away from the press.

"Wilhelmina Jakes (one of the girls originally involved) has a room reservation, normally we would expect her to return. I do not think she is back yet. The other girl is not due to come back."

SOME 700 freshmen enrolled in A and M University Wednesday. More than 2,700 students are expected.

The campus is quiet, but no students are riding the buses, and the boycott cotninues.

In a special interview, Dr. Gore said:

"I'm tired of it all. If I have to listen to any more talk I'll crack up." Dr. Gore made this heply when asked what was his comment now following the radio broadcasts.

He declared "I have made no statement to anyone."

"Does your statement to the AFRO, that no one will be fired still stand?" he was asked.

"Yes, it has not changed. Please don't ask any more, don't you have any heart?"

Mrs. Goe said, "Somebody has to save him. They have twisted his words for some ulterior motive.

"Why would anyone want to crucify him. I feel sorry for those people who are fighting for whatever they are fighting for."

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — "If they pass new laws in an effort to stop us, we will test their laws."

This was the promise made by the Rev. K. Steele, boycott leader, prior to the special session of the legislature here last July.

In keeping with this pledge, a test of the car-for-hire law now looms as a certainty.

EIGHT PERSONS, including the Rev. Mr. Steele, will be tried on Thursday (Sept. 6) on charges of violating the car-for-hire law in connection with car pool activities.

It is understood that the constitutionality of the law, as interpreted by police and city officials, will be challenged.

Further, it is understood that NAACP lawyers will collaborate with Theries Lindsay, boycott attorney, in laying the legal basis for carrying the fight all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, if necessary.

THE REV. MR. STEELE, president, and other offices of the Inter-Civic Council, met last weekend to map details of a civil suit to be filed in connection with the arrests.

Both the police department and the city commission will be listed as defendants, it is understood.

Afro-American

Despite the arrest of 11 drivers, including himself, the Rev. Mr. Steele declared Wednesday: "I've always picked people up since way before the boycott started and I'm not going to stop now."

The minister said he hadn't noticed any diminishing of activity among the drivers in the car pool since the police crackdown began last week. He added:

"Actually, the police are helping us every time they make an arrest as it makes our people more and more determined."

It was also announced that a plan for carrying auxiliary, or "spare," drivers in car pool vehicles beginning Monday to avoid delays which have been caused when drivers are arrested and taken in for questioning.

HE DOESN'T actually own the car he was arrested for driving in the car paal, the Rev. Mr. Steele said. "It's God's car and I'm just the chauffeur," he declared.

Having posted $200 bond after his arrest, the Rev. Mr. Steels, pointed out that he receives no payment for the upkeep of the car, added: "I burned just as much gas in my car before the boycott started as I have since."

In addition to the Rev. Mr. Steele, others accused of violating the car-for-hire law are the Rev. King S. DuPont, Dan Speed, director of the car pool; Horace Parker, Eddie Ironns, an accountant at Florida A. and M. University, and his wife, Mrs. Bessie Ironns; Ralph Coleman and Ossie Burns.

THE REV. MR. STEELE defined the arrests as an all-out effort by police to break the boycott before school begins this month.

When bus services was resumed last Aug. 1, after being suspended for a month, the Rev. Mr. Steele and other ICC officers urged colored people to refrain from riding.

Although two colored men were hired as bus drivers, the boycott leaders declared: "We will not be herded to the rear of buses like cattle, although they are manned by colored drivers."

THE ARRESTS followed an opinion by Attorney General Richard Erwin that car pool drivers were violating the car-for-hire statue, although they rode assengers free of charge.

To date, however, the law has been applied only against colored persons. Many state and city white employees transport their friends and krslb-o i,c ua eat dnp ycor ow. coworkers daily, but no action has been taken against them.

Police Chief Frank Stoutamire announced that the arrests will continue until the police are convinced the car pool activities have been curtailed.

On Saturday, the colored ministers of the city—under sponsorship of ICC—held a citywide Day of Prayer. City officials were invited.

The previous night the Ku Klux Klan held a big meeting about six miles outside the city.

Tallahassee, Fla.
Inter-Civic Council

Aug. 29—The city commissioners, because of public disfavor, shelved their plan to pass an ordinance that would make voluntary car pools illegal.

However, they were able to get the state attorney general to interpret a state law involving "vehicles for hire" to cover the colored car pool. With this in mind, the police have arrested 11 persons to date with the charge of improper driver's license and improper tag.

It is the concensus that they do not expect to win these cases but they hope to accomplish three things;

(1) To break the treasury of the Inter-Civic Council;

(2) To intimidate enough drivers to render the pool ineffective;

(3) To cause a stoppage of service for a week or more, which they hope will tire the persons out of walking with the result that they will go back to the buses.

MR. AND MRS. HENRY SMITH and their twin daughters of 821 Liberty St. were driving their own car.

The father on the way to work, the mother and a neighbor on their way to the dentist in a neighboring city, when the police rolled up besides them and barked, "consider yourself under arrest; follow me to the police station."

Upon arrival at the station, the police lieutenant placed a blank charge form in front of him ordering him to sign it. Mr. Smith told him that he couldn't sign that statement, that he would have to see his charges.

SEEING THE futility of their intimidation attempt, the chief of police ordered the lieutenant to let him out, by which time they had the charge of improper license and tag prepard for him to sign.

He was released with a $100 appearance bond.

August 27, the attorney for the Inter-Civic Council handed City Judge Joan Rudd a memorandum to the effect that, in view of the fact that the charge of violating the "vehicle for hire" law is a state law, the city has no jurisdiction in the cases of the persons whom the city police have arrested.

Monday, of course was plea day for those that were arrested. Upon glancing at the memorandum, the judge told the attorney:

"I'VE BEEN running this court for three years and this is the first time I've ever had an attorney try to tell me how to run it; either enter a plea for the persons you're representing or I'll forfeit their bonds ($150 each) and order their rearrest," whereupon the attorney entered a plea of not guilty.

Ku Klux Klan membership applications were found scattered in the downtown store fronts early Monday morning. The application appealed to all white Americans who believed in segregation. The joining fee, $10, the renewal fee, $3.

IT WAS reliably learned that the KKK planned a cross burning meeting just outside city limits of Tallahassee Saturday, September 1. The Inter-Civic Council planned a prayer meeting at the exact time the Klan meeting was to convene.

Our slogan for the night, "Although we walk through the valley of the shadow of death, we will fear NO evil for Thou art with us."

Instead of getting the result of intimidating the colored people into riding the bus, the police, through their harassment, have made them more determined to stay off the buses.

Since the harassment began, fewer people have showed up at the car pool stations, but they're either riding with a friend, their bosses are picking them up, or they are WALKING, because they're NOT riding the buses, much to the dismay of the bus company officials and the city officials.

RUMORS STILL persist that the bus company officials have told the city officials that unless the colored people begin riding the buses within the next month, they will have to go out of business, this time for good.

The Leon County Chapter of the Florida Voters' League has divided Leon County into 13 communities, each of which is being worked systematically by teams in an attempt to get every eligible colored citizen registered.

THE REV. MR. STEELE, when questioned Friday about seemingly having cooled toward the bus boycott and gone over to the side of President Gore, emphatically denied this.

"I am still with you 100 per cent," the worn-looking pastor of Bethel Baptist Church told the mass meeting participants. "If he (Gore) fires anyone, I will fight him and fight harder than ever.

"I don't think, however, he is out to hurt anyone. He is interested in the university. He has worked hard there to build a first-class school and raise teachers' salaries.

"I said what I felt all the time was right. This is not a battle of hate but one of love," he concluded.

"Here in Tallahassee, Fla., the only unconquered state capitol of the confederacy, we (the Inter-Civic Council) have found the fight for freedom to be a very expensive affair.

"It has been remarkable however the way the people have kept the head of our organization above the waters of insolvency. We have received a few contributions from out of the state and city; for this we are indeed thankful.

"Now that our protest has brought 11 of us under arrest and arraignment in City Court and since we are positive that all these cases will have to be appealed at least to one and maybe more of the higher courts of the land, it is now imperative that we make a special appeal to our friends over the country for help.

WE ARE further obligated to help our churches with the transportation crisis that arose from our walking campaign against segregation.

"At present we have been able to help only one of our churches with the purchase of a station wagon. We are now in need of at least three additional vehicles.

"Therefore we are here and now appealing to those who are opposed to segregation and who are in sympathy with our cause to send us whatever help possible. This is indeed a SOS call.

"Within the last six weeks there have been times when our treasury has been as low as $37.

"Send all contributions addressed to the Inter-Civic Council, Inc., 803 Floral St., Tallahassee, Fla."

Tallahassee Mayor Says Some Seek Self Glorification

New York

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Sept. 1 (AP)—Mayor John Humphress said today that some of Tallahassee's Negro leaders were using the boycott of the city buses as a means "for their own self glorification."

Mr. Humphress said in a statement that everything Negro leaders had complained about in the bus dispute had been rectified except segregation in the buses.

Sun 9-2-56

"Negro drivers have been employed by the bus company and every reasonable assurance given as to prompt and courteous service to passengers," he said.

"But the extremists in the Negro group are not satisfied," he added. "They apparently thrive on agitation and must have an issue."

The boycott was started three months ago in a dispute over segregation seating, which is required by state law.

Mr. Humphress charged that Negro leaders were making "reckless statements" that were "absolutely untrue and unfounded."

Florida Group Delays Action On Car Pools

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Wed. 8-15-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Aug. 1 (AP) — The Tallahassee City Commission postponed action indefinitely today on a proposed ordinance which would have regulated operation of car pools.

The action was taken without discussion.

P. 2-A

City commissioners had said previously the ordinance was unnecessary in view of a ruling earlier this month by State Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin that car pool drivers transporting Negro bus boycotters must get "for hire" tags for their automobiles.

The proposed city ordinance would have required cars transporting passengers "regulary and continuously" in the city limits to buy special tags.

The attorney general's ruling was given to Mrs. Ina Thompson, state motor vehicle commissioner. She said she had asked for it at the request of several groups, including Tallahassee city officials.

Tallahassee Gets Its Buses Again

Defender Chicago, Ill.
Sat. 8-11-56

The Tallahassee bus boycott is facing a critical hurdle as once crowded buses begin to roll again here after being forced from the streets by the effective campaign pursued by Negroes fighting for recent treatment and a representative share of jobs.

Various techniques are being utilized by the local Lions Club and other civic organizations along with city officials in the "ride-a-bus" campaign which is accompanying the resumption of bus service here on Aug. 2.

Although the bus lines are rerouted away from the Negro communities, much of the campaign is directed toward breaking the bus boycott which caused the local transit company to discontinue its services July 1.

Check of the records revealed that some $100,000 of the gross income of $170,000 has been poured into the coffers of the company by Negroes riders during the past year.

Among the techniques being used in the campaign are issuance of cut-rate passbooks particularly to white women who employ Negro domestics.

Free tea, coffee and orange juice is also being offered bus riders and both newspapers and radio are giving time to encourage persons to ride buses.

Intimidation of Negro automobile riders and drivers is also a part of the campaign to force Negroes to ride the bus.

It has been reported that two Negro bus drivers will be imported from St. Petersburg to drive buses which will still service primarily Negro areas.

There is also a report that a "ride-a-bus" petition is being circulated through the Negro communities by "selected Negro leaders."

The local newspaper editor announced that "a leading Negro citizen" visited his office and stated that a number of Negroes wanted to ride the bus, but were afraid of "reprisals."

Critics now include — in addition to local officials, bus company executives and some newspapers — Gov. Leroy Collins, who termed the bus boycott "a miscarriage of ambition."

Admitting the boycotters "had some just grievances," Gov. Collins said that the NAACP, which he credits with leading the protest, "should concern itself with other conditions of far more importance than where people sit on buses."

The Inter Civic Council supported boycott started some 10 weeks ago when two coeds from Florida AM and N university were arrested for taking a seat next to whites. Their cases were later dismissed.

Cities Transit company halted service Saturday night, July 1 and Stetson Coleman, company president, announced it a temporary move pending a decision as to whether "the white people or the Negroes are going to run" the city.

Of Tallahassee's 40,000 people, about 70 percent of the daily bus traffic of around 1,500 had come from among the city's 14,000 Negroes.

Big kink in the negotiations has been the refusal of the city and bus company to meet requests of the council for non-segregated seating on buses.

The city had agreed to a plan of reserving one 3-passenger seat on the front of buses "for potential white passengers" in Negro areas until all other seats were filled, then first come, first serve (except on Fla. AM and N and Frenchtown routes).

Council members in their last offer asked a 24-man interracial committee, with the 12 Negro tion wagons operated by the pool are not self supporting and meet with continual harassment from city police.

members to be appointed by the council, to work out the seating arrangement.

Daniel B. Speed, grocerymar and transportation chairman, has plans for an improved pool service.

There are 74 cars, three station wagons and a bus available. Speed's busy store is central headquarters for calls for rides and cars are dispatched from there and four other locations.

A full-time secretary has been hired.

Critics have lambasted leaders of the boycott and questioned their motive. The boycotters also refuted statements that most of the outspoken fronters are "newcomers."

On the matter of the boycott aims being called unreasonable, one woman said "those who say that it's unreasonable for Negroes and whites to sit together are saying that three-fourths of America is unreasonable."

"If seating is the minor thing they say it is," she challenged, "why do they worry about it?"

Claims that racial relations have been greatly impaired by the boycott were denied by a number of people who said they see no or little difference in the average person of the other race.

A NEWS RELEASE, purportdly from the Inter-Civic Council which has been sponsoring the bus protest, charged Dr. Gore with having stated during a faculty meeting that "either you are loyal to the university or to something out there; cast your lot with this ship or get out. You can't be loyal to both."

Dr. Gore charged that statements attributed to him were distorted.

"I thought it my duty to advise members of the college family to evaluate their positions in the community in respect to current existing problems. I made no reference to the bus boycott nor did I dwell more than three minutes on the subject during a discussion on many matters affecting the college that lasted some 45 minutes.

"I have been advised by persons not officially connected with the college of personal sit-

DR. GORE SAID that no official action had been taken in regard to any member of his faculty and no member of the board of control or any legislative representative has said anything in regard to the participation of mem'ers of the faculty in any community movement.

"I must admit, however, that when matters affecting the personal lives of some of my faculty members were called to my attention, I did call them in and discuss the matter with them," Dr. Gore said.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the ICC, also said that the release of statements attributed to Dr. Gore were "unfortunate and untimely."

Steel said that as far as he was concerned, there was little if any deterioration in race relations in Tallahassee since the boycott. "In fact, merchants downtown seem to show an even greater respect for Negro patrons than previously," the Rev. Mr. Steele said.

Bus Protest Records Are Surrendered

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (INS) — The Tallahassee Negro inter-civic council Thursday turned over its records to city court after receiving a subpoena issued by Municipal Judge John A. Rudd.

A hearing was held earlier Thursday and council Attorney Theries Lindsey objected to the subpoenas on grounds that he did not have time to consult with council members of the significance of the order.

However, Judge Rudd ordered the records turned over to the court by 2:30 P. M. and shortly afterward they were delivered without comment.

The subpoena was issued in the case of Dan Speed, one of 10 Negroes charged with operating a for-hire vehicle without a proper license during the boycott of Tallahassee buses by Negroes.

FAMU President's Statements 'Distorted'

Bus Boycott Upsets Fla. Campus

By AL DUNMORE

Courier Tallahassee, Fla. p. 3 Sat. 9-29-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Dr. George W. Gore, president of Florida A and M University, denied statements attributed to him inferring that he had advised faculty and staff members at the state-supported institution against participating in the three-month-old bus protest.

"Published statements completely distorted remarks made by me as president of the university during a confidential chat with members of the college family. I feel first that the published statements resulted from a breach of confidence on the part of someone and certainly those published statements were out of context," the president told the Courier.

enough for criticism is usually too small for praise. uations that affected member of the faculty. In some instances where creditors were lenient, they are now demanding that obligations be met. Since these persons were contacting my office with threats of garnisheeing wages, I thought it best to advise my faculty that this situation existed. I would have been remiss if I had not explained this to them. What I said was not in the light of attempting to influence any local, state or national problem. It was not a personal matter that needed airing," said the university president.

member of the ICC, and operator of the Speed Grocery store, one of the largest Negro-owned and operated grocery stores in Florida, said he had felt no economic squeeze as a result of his participation in the protest. "In fact," Speed said, "I can now buy more stock than I need."

Dr. Gore, in his interview with the Courier, stated that as the president of Florida A&M University, his major concern was the welfare of the institution. "I cannot place myself in a position to dictate to any of the members of my faculty how they must think or act in regards to problems outside the university—but I do know that what affects their lives personally, must affect their usefulness to the institution."

The Negroes will come to trial October 4. Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter-Civic Council and a leader of the boycott, has two charges pending against him. All arrests were the outgrowth of car pools being set up during the boycott, which has lost some of its effectiveness recently.

Collins Hits Bus Action by NAACP

By JOHN L. BOYLES
Herald Bureau Chief

TALLAHASSEE — Gov. LeRoy Collins Monday charged the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in the Tallahassee bus boycott with a "miscarriage of ambition."

The Cities Transit Bus Co. here pulled its buses out of service Saturday night after a month-long Negro boycott.

Collins said, "I frankly think grievances about the operation that the Negroes had some just of the bus service. But it is clear to me that the city authorities indicated in good faith a willingness to adjust these grievances.

"I think it was terribly short-sighted and unreasonable for the leaders of the boycott movement not to accept these adjustments, relieve the tension and reestablish the general attitude which has long prevailed here for the steady and proper improvement of the Negro and his opportunities," the governor said.

Collins asserted that "as a citizen of Tallahassee" he will be glad to help in accomplishing a satisfactory settlement of the boycott.

He said he hoped that "when the full impact of what has been done here is understood" a new effort will be made to settle the issue.

The governor said the NAACP should "concern itself with other conditions of far more importance than where people sit on buses. There are many areas for real and substantial improvement such as health, moral and educational standards."

Efforts in those fields would be of greater benefit to the Negroes, the governor said.

"The tragedy of the bus situation is that it has gained nothing for the Negroes, and much has been lost in the tensions and antagonisms which have been developed. The Negroes who have been furnishing the leadership in the agitation of bus integration, have turned their backs on the agencies and the citizens of the community who have been helping them the most," the governor declared.

Collins said the Tallahassee City Commission has provided funds to assist in the building of one of the "finest Negro hospitals in the country" and the city has developed a recreation program for Negro youth, "including playgrounds and a community swimming pool just as adequate in every respect as that provided for white citizens.

"Our Negroes have been provided with modern school buildings and well trained teachers. We have been fighting a winning battle to eliminate midwifery and to clear out slums," the governor said.

The Rev. C. F. Steele, president of the Negro Inter-Civic Council, was out of town and could not be reached for comment on Collins' statement.

Buses roll, folk walk

By SAMUEL HOSKINS
Afro Staff Correspondent

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., — "We will not be herded to the rear of a bus driven by colored drivers.

"Our request for the time being is for democracy, fairness, and decency in bus accommodations for our people.

"This we have not been promised. Consequently our protest of love, prayer and faith continues."

That was the uncompromising answer the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter-Civic Council, gave Thursday to the Cities Transit Co., which had made a bid to regain the thousands of colored passengers lost since the boycott began.

THE EMPLOYMENT of the colored drivers, one of the original demands made by the boycotters, came as a surprise when the buses resumed operation after a month's suspension.

At the same time, led by the Chamber of Commerce, and all-out effort was made to split leadership of the Inter - Civic Council, in an effort to break the boycott.

Two men were hired to solicit signatures of colored citizens to a petition urging resumption of bus service. The Chamber had announced that 900 had signed the petition.

BUT WHEN bus service was resumed Thursday only three persons were counted on the line running past the Florida A. and M. University campus in the morning.

Four more passengers, three of them aged persons and one a child, rode the bus in the afternoon period.

David Moore, one of the two colored drivers, however, insisted he had carried a total of 40 passengers during his eight-hour run.

The other colored driver is Edgar Richardson. Both men had been employed by the transit company for a number of years as maintenance men.

EXPLAINING WHY a scattered few of the colored passengers had gone back to the buses, the Rev. Mr. Steele and Dan Speed, chairman of the council's transportation committee, agreed that they had probably been misled.

"Most of them probably thought the boycott had ended because the company had hired those colored drivers."

Concurring in this explanation, the Rev. Mr. Steele added, "I really don't think there were too many on there. Nothing like the number that used to ride.

"If they can't get more than that when the rides are free I doubt they'll get many when they have to pay."

MEANWHILE, the city commissioners have thus far failed to carry out their threat to "crack down" on the car pool drivers.

Other than continued police harrassment of both drivers and passengers, the operation, directed by Mr. Speed, continues unabated.

Two bills introduced at the special session of the legislature died in committee Wednesday when Gov. Leroy Collins, in an unprecedented action, declared the session at an end.

ONE OF the measures would have made it against the law for any motorist to carry any passengers in his car other than persons related to him by either blood or marriage.

The second, aimed at supporters of the boycott on the Florida A. and M. campus, would have prohibited any state employee from participating in any boycott.

During the regular Sunday night mass meeting, the Rev. Mr. Steele, redefined in two words the only way the city and transit company could get colored passengers back on the buses.

* * * *

"ABOLISH SEGREGATION," he shouted in a booming voice to a packed congregation, which cheered his declaration until the rafters rang.

2 Are Seized In Car-Pool Crackdown

Herald P.3

Tues. 8-28-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Aug. 27 (AP)—Two Negro leaders in Tallahassee's 3-month-old bus boycott were arrested by police today in a crackdown on car-pool autos operating without "for hire" tags.

One of the men, the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter Civic Council, announced that his group was preparing a court test of legality of the arrests.

The two cases made today were set for hearings in City Court Sept. 4. The arrests increased to nine the number made since the crackdown was started last week.

The Inter Civic Council is sponsoring the boycott of Tallahassee buses by Negro riders in protest against segregated seating. Attorney General Richard Ervin recently ruled that the boycotters' car-pool vehicles must carry "for hire" tags which cost an average of $15 more than private license plates.

Steele, who is also president of the Tallahassee chapter of the National Association for the Advanceement of Colored People, was releeased after posting a $100 bond.

Dan Speed, chairman of the transportation committee of the Inter Civic Council, also was arrested for failing to have a "for hire" tag on the car-pool vehicle. He too was released under $100 band.

Atlanta Ga.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—(INS)—Two leaders in the Tallahassee bus boycott were arrested Monday for operating Negro car pool vehicles without "for hire" tags.

Taken into custody and later freed on $100 bond each were the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter Civic Council and Dan Speed, Chairman of the Council's Transportation Committee.

The council is sponsoring the boycott in an attempt to enforce its demands for an end to segregated bus seating.

Tallahassee police began cracking down on car pool operators last week after the attorney general ruled that cars being used in the pool fell into the classification of "for hire" vehicles and, therefore required special tags.

Tampa NAACP Drops Bus Integration Move

Post + Times Herald P.3

Tues. 8-28-56

TAMPA, Fla., Aug. 3 (AP) Tampa Negroes will not try to integrate buses and have withdrawn petitions asking for a ban on segregated seating, the State President of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said today.

The petitions have been withdrawn and no move will be made by the NAACP in Tampa to have integration take place,' said William Fordham, a Tampa attorney.

"We are very much satisfied with conditions on Tampa's bus lines and in no way will we seek integration."

Negroes at Tallahassee Ignore New Bus Service

Evening Star P.10-C

Washington, D.C.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 12 (AP).—Tallahassee Negroes last night publicly ignored an announcement that bus service will be resumed here and reaffirmed their determination to hold out for fully integrated seating.

Thurs. 7-12-56

No mention was made at a mass meeting of the Negro Inter-civic Council of plans announced by the Cities Transit Co. to reinstate the service, which was suspended July 1. The company halted operations in the wake of financial losses caused by the Negro boycott. The boycott is a protest against segregated seating.

Instead, council members said they would continue to provide their own transportation by means of car pools. They took up a collection toward purchase of station wagons to serve the Negro community.

The transit company announced yesterday it would resume service over routes to be determined by a survey of potential riders. If Negroes are not willing to ride, the routes will serve white neighborhoods only, Cities Transit Manager Charles L. Carter, said.

The bus company acted in response to a request from the Tallahassee Chamber of Commerce, which plans to sponsor a ride-the-bus campaign. This city of 40,000 has been without public transportation except for taxicabs for nearly two weeks.

On Sunday Negroes rejected a City Commission compromise under which one three-passenger seat would be set aside for white persons but any other seat would be available to Negroes.

There was no suggestion last night that Sunday's action would be reconsidered.

Boycott is 'justified,' Lee asserts

Afro-American P.8

Baltimore, Md.

By ELIZABETH M. OLIVER

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.— "The bus boycott is justifiable," J. R. E. Lee Jr., business manager of Florida A. and M. University told the AFRO Monday.

The boycott has been carried on by the colored and white citizens here since May.

"Without any question," Mr. Lee added, "it has served a wonderful purpose. It is an expression of resentment against riding the buses and it is justifiably so."

Sat. 10-6-56

MR. LEE DENIED that the governor's committee on race relations is for the purpose of maintaining segregation.

He seemed puzzled when a reporter showed him the governor's statement that the purpose of the committee is to continue jim crow in the schools "without force or bad feelings."

MR. LEE EXPLAINED that the committee was appointed Aug. 30 and that there are two other members, both white. They are Judge L. L. Fabinsiki of Pensacola and Dr. Doak Campbell of Florida State University.

Asked what the group had done about the boycott, Mr. Lee said:

"Nothing has been done. On Sept. 5, at our first meeting, there was a suggestion that a group of colored and white citizens get together and confer on a solution to the boycott."

President Of NAACP Arrested

Herald

Miami, Fla

Tues. 8-28-56

TALLAHASSEE — (UP) — Two Negro leaders, including the local NAACP president were arrested Monday in a police crackdown on a Negro car pool used to boycott the city's segregated bus system.

Seven others arrested last week on identical charges — driving private vehicles in the car pool as commercial carriers without "for hire" licenses — pleaded not guilty to the charges. City Judge John A. Rudd set Sept. 6 as a tentative date for trial.

The Rev. C. K. Steele and car pool chairman Dan Speed were arrested while driving their cars to ferry Negro passengers to work. It was the second arrest in the three-month-old boycott for Steele who was picked up before on charges of running a stop sign. Both were released under $100 bond.

Steele, local NAACP president and head of the Negro Inter-Civic Council which is spearheading the boycott, charged when the arrests began last week that they were an effort to force Negroes to ride the buses "and the more of that type of thing they do the fewer people will ride the bus."

The arrests were ordered by City Manager Arvah Hopkins after a ruling by Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin that the car pool operations financed by the Inter-Civic Council violated the state "for hire" laws. Ervin said the drivers are required to hold special licenses costing $1 per 100 pounds of vehicle weight.

Hopkins said use of unlicensed, uninspected and uninsured vehicles as commercial carriers constituted a "public hazard."

The Rev. K. S. DuPont, council vice chairman, and six other drivers entered pleas of innocent to the charges before Judge Rudd Monday. Council Attorney Theries Lindsey filed a memorandum with the court charging that the city has no authority to enforce the state "for hire" law and that City Court is without jurisdiction in the cases.

Meanwhile, bus company manager Charles Carter said Cities Transit, Inc. buses continue to carry "between 400 and 500 Negroes a day" on the old basis of segregated seating.

The boycott, which began May 28 on the campus of Florida A&M University for Negroes, forced the bus company out of business during July because of a 60 per cent revenue loss. Service was resumed under chamber of commerce sponsorship Aug. 2 on new routes designed to appeal largely to white passengers, and Carter put Negro drivers on two predominantly Negro runs.

Carter said bus patronage is "pretty slow" despite a chamber of commerce campaign, but is expected to pick up swiftly when the public schools open Sept. 4 and the two universities here reopen later in September for the fall semester.

Tallahassee Bus Boycott Still Effective

Post + Times Herald

Kansas City, Mo.

Fri. 8-24-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The manager of the Tallahassee bus company declared Wednesday that business is "picking up" but added the boycott of the city buses by local Negroes is still "very effective."

Charles Carter declared that business "is still 40 per cent lower than at this time last year." The buses were boycotted May 29 in protest over the arrest of two co-eds from all-Negro Florida A. and M. college who refused to move to the rear of a segregated vehicle.

The company was forced out of business July 1 but returned its coaches to the streets Aug. 1 after a "ride-the-bus" campaign by the Chamber of Commerce gained additional white patrons.

Carter said the average daily passenger load is around 2,500. He said some 400 to 600 Negroes are included, "much less" than before the boycott.

Meanwhile, 10 Negro leaders of the movement will go on trial in Tallahassee next week on charges of operating car pools without proper licenses.

Fla. Officials Get Boycott Challenge

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—"Here, tonight, we must call upon our police chief, our city commission, our state chief executive to put a stop to these injustices.

"If they fail us—and I hope they won't—there remains but one alternative.

"Of necessity and in self defense, we will have to ask the U. S. Department of Justice to step in and preserve our constitutional rights."

Reference was to the stopping and questioning on Friday and Saturday of six car owners and 22 passengers.

Each person was taken to police headquarters and held for from 15 minutes to two hours. Most of them were required to sign statements.

He added: "The police department is participating in a wild goose chase in the wild hope of obtaining "evidence" as an excuse to really arrest peace-loving and lawabiding citizens.

"Is this democracy? Is this justice? Is this Christianity?" He asked.

"There is nothing Christlike about such tactics. They are void of anything akin to justice and certainly foreign to democracy as Americans like to think of it." The clergyman declared.

He further defined the police action as "tactics employed by police states."

"They shouldn't happen in the United States. . . They must not be permitted to continue in Tallahassee."

THE REV. MICHAEL HARRIS, pastor of Bethel AME Church where the meeting was held, suggested that the clergymen, under the leadership of the Rev. Mr. Steele, meet and pray on the front steps of the Capitol for members of the Legislature which convened on Monday.

One of the major items the special session was called to handle is the racial segregation issue.

Gov. Leroy Collins has officially approved a program submitted by a "committee of legal experts," headed by former Circuit Judge L. L. Fabisinski to block integration in schools.

At least three representatives have announced they will sponsor other racial segregation bills.

Rep. Kenneth Ballinger (Leon County) is sponsoring a bill aimed at breaking the bus boycott.

"We are not worried about the Ku Klux Klan, evilminded police or revengeful legislators. Our eyes are on the guideposts of human dignity and, if necessary, we will walk forever."

Theries Lindsay, ICC counsel, intimated the boycott soon will enter the court suit stage.

"If our plans materialize, there will be major developments soon," he told the meeting.

It was revealed at Sunday night's meeting that a women's auxiliary to the boycott movement has been organized. It is composed of ministers' wives, school teachers, sorority and social clubs members.

The group is contacting similar organizations throughout the country it was revealed.

TALLAHASSEE'S BUSES HALT IN NEGRO BOYCOTT

It's Either Walk or Call a Taxicab

Tallahassee, Fla. July 1 (AP)—It was call a cab or walk today for those among Tallahassee's 26,000 white residents who depend upon public transit facilities.

Cities Transit company suspended service on its bus routes last midnight as a result of a month long boycott by Negro patrons. The Negroes normally supplied 70 per cent of the bus company's revenue.

Cities Transit had operated in Florida's capital city since 1940.

Stetson Coleman, president of the company, announced 10 days ago bus service would end July 1 unless some solution was found to get the city's 14,000 Negroes back on the buses.

Contract Change Approved

The last hope for a compromise ended Friday night when the Negro inter civic council refused to retreat on its demands for an end to segregated seating on the buses and immediate employment of Negro drivers.

The city had agreed to amend the bus franchise to permit open seating on the predominantly Negro lines except for one three-passenger lateral seat at the front which would have been reserved for whites and to allow employment of Negro drivers at the discretion of the company.

The city apparently has no plan for any kind of emergency service. Commissioner W. T. Mayo, who has been the city's spokesman during the boycott, was not available for comment, but there has been nothing from the city to indicate any emergency measures are contemplated to provide public transportation.

The inter civic council scheduled a mass meeting for tonight to discuss its plan to set up its own transportation system. Some Negro leaders have suggested establishment of profit making jitney lines. This would require a franchise from the city.

Life Made Hard For Boycotters

Say Drivers of Protest Cars Not Licensed Chauffeurs

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (ANP) — City officials are bending over backwards here to do as much as they can to make life as hard as possible for Tallahassee's Negroes who stopped riding Jim Crow buses more than six weeks ago.

Last week the City commission ordered Police Chief Friend Stoutmire to begin arresting drivers of the cars which have been providing transportation for Negroes since May 28, when Negroes began boycotting city buses in protest of biased seating.

The order came after City Attorney James Messer alleged that investigation had shown that most of the drivers in the pool were not licensed as chauffeurs and the cars were not bearing the proper license tags.

Passenger riding in the car pool are not charged fares, but Messer said that is his opinion that the cars are operating in the public carrier field since the pool is supported by contributions from passengers.

Messer said that the police have been investigating for the past two weeks and have compiled lists of cars, drivers, pick-up points, destinations and passengers.

This information was turned over to the city prosecutor as background information, apparently to be used when police begin arresting the drivers.

The Rev. K. S. DuPont, vice-president of the Inter-Civic council, meanwhile urged all drivers in the car pool "to be as thoughtful and careful as they can and to offer no resistance at all if questioned by police."

"We are asking all persons wherever they are," he said, "to join us in prayer, morning, midday, and afternoon, for a better Tallahassee."

Rev. DuPont said his organization would call a business meeting at which the police crackdown will be discussed.

"It's kind of shocking," he said, "but I guess we'll have to pass through it."

Bus Service Suspended In Florida Negro Boycott

Tallahassee, Fla., July 1 (AP)—It was call a cab or walk today for those among Tallahassee's 26,000 white residents who depend on public transit facilities.

Cities Transit Company suspended service on its bus routes last midnight as a result of a month-long boycott by Negro patrons.

Cities Transit had served Florida's capital city since 1940.

Stetson Coleman, company president, said 10 days ago bus service would end July 1 unless some solution was found to get the city's 14,000 Negroes back on the buses.

The last hope for a compromise ended Friday night when the Negro intercivic council refused to retreat on its demands for an end to segregated seating on the buses and immediate employment of Negro drivers.

The City had agreed to amend the bus franchise to permit open seating on the predominantly Negro lines except for one three-passenger lateral seat at the the front, which would have been reserved for whites, and to allow employment of Negro drivers at the discretion of the company.

The City apparently has no plans for any kind of emergency service.

The intercivic council is going to discuss a plan to set up its own transportation system. Some Negro leaders have suggested establishment of profit-making jitney lines. This would require a franchise from the City.

Coleman said Cities Transit would oppose any new bus or jitney franchise. He indicated the suspension of bus service is not permanent. He said the service has been halted until it has been determined "whether the Negroes or whites were running the town."

The boycott was touched off by the arrest of two Florida A. & M. coeds for refusal to move to the rear of a bus after they had taken seats in the front.

Fellow students at the Negro university started the boycott May 28. It had spread to the entire Negro community.

Coleman said a week ago the bus line normally collected about 1,500 fares daily, about 1,000 from Negroes and 500 from whites.

'We're in This to the Finish,' Declare Tallahassee (Fla.) Bus Boycotters; Over 100 Negroes Quizzed by City Cops

By ALBERT J. DUNMORE

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Undismayed by continued police intimidations and threats of preventive legislation, the Inter-City Council, leaders of the bus boycott which stymied this city's public transportation, has announced that "we are in it to the finish . . . . we'll keep walking."

At a mass meeting in Flipper AME Church, Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the council and pastor of Bethel Baptist Church, was roundly applauded by an overflow audience when he announced: "We will not be frightened. We are in it to the finish. We supported the bus company for the convenience of others and until we get a fair 10-cent ride, no more . . . no less . . . the same that is given other citizens who are not Negroes . . . we will keep on walking."

This was the group's answer to the City Commission and other lawmakers who have announced that laws will be passed both on the city and state levels to check the bus boycott.

Already, a city ordinance which will forbid persons to "regularly or continuously" transport persons "not related by blood or marriage" has gone through its first reading before the City Commission.

If the ordinance passes it will go into effect on Aug. 14. The ordinance carries a $500 fine or 60-day jail sentence.

THE INTER-CIVIC Council, through its attorney, Therias Lindsey, has announced that they will contest this measure if it is passed.

One city commissioner asked if this anti-car pool ordinance would affect those state workers who use the car pool system to go to work. The questioner was informed that this was not applicable to them.

In the meantime, Representative Kenneth Ballinger of Leon County has announced that he will introduce an anti-car pool and anti-boycott measure in the State Legislature.

Observers feel that such a measure would have little opportunity to pass.

IN THE MEANTIME, the city police department has begun to clamp down on the car-pool operators and have taken into custody more than 100 persons.

Although the city claims that no arrests have been made, the Inter-Civic Council reports several instances that could be traced directly to the boycott.

Police Chief Frank Stoutemire said that the persons taken into custody were being investigated as the department attempts to determine what action should be taken.

City Attorney James Messer claims that the car pool is being operated in violation of state laws governing "for hire" vehicles. The Inter-Civic Council points out that the cars are not for hire since no charge is made the riders.

PERSONS TAKEN into custody are questioned at length of their participation in the bus boycott, whether they attend meetings of the Inter-Civic Council, whether they contribute to the council's fund, whether they receive gas from the car-pool funds, and whether they would ride the bus when the services are resumed.

It is believed that these questions are being asked to establish the fact that cars operating in the car pool are actually "for hire" and that the funds contributed to the council is "payment received for services rendered."

The Council has instructed its members that when taken into custody to refuse to answer any questions other than to give their names and addresses and to produce their driving licenses if so asked when driving cars.

SOME $245 was contributed to the council fund at the meeting.

The Rev. Metz Rollins, treasurer of the council and pastor of the local Presbyterian church, announced prior to the collection that there was $2659.28 in the treasury.

Prominent in the audience were a number of members of the Florida A. and M. University faculty . . . many holders of top positions including several Ph. Ds and department heads.

the time being is for democracy, fairness and decency in bus accommodations for our people. This we have not been promised. Consequently, our protest by love, prayer and faith continues."

Mr. Steele made the announcement after the local bus lines hired a pair of veteran local bus company employes as drivers and put them to work on routes through predominately Negro areas, but maintained its policy of segregating riders.

The resumption of bus service was on a "free" basis the first day. Newspapermen reported counting five Negro riders on one of the lines. The bus company's general manager, Charles L. Carter, said that nearly 1,500 white passengers took advantage of the free offer and noted that one of the Negro drivers had told him that a total of 40 Negro patrons had ridden for "free." The drivers were hired without advance publicity.

However, the Rev. Mr. Steele countered, "I really don't think there were too many on there, nothing like the number that used to ride. If they can't get more than that when the rides are free, I doubt they wi

Tallahassee Council Drops Effort To End Bus Boycott

Tallahassee, Fla., July 12 (AP) —All efforts to settle the Negro bus boycott were dropped by the Tallahassee City Commission today.

"It's been proved to me that all they want is integration and they'll never get it as long as I'm on the City Commission," said H. C. Summitt in a statement endorsed by a Commission majority.

Negro Council Meets

All five commissioners joined in a declaration that there will be no more boycott negotiations with the Negroes "under any circumstances."

Mayor Fred Winterle indicated there is a possibility that the City will make a formal protest to the State Board of Control about the boycott leadership assumed by some members of the faculty of Florida A. & M. University for Negroes.

The State Board of Control determines policies of A. & M. and other State universities.

The Rev. M. G. Miles, director of student activities at A. & M., presided last night at a mass meeting of the Negro Inter-civic Council, which has spearheaded the boycott. At the meeting the Negroes took up a collection to finance the car pools that have provided them with transportation.

They also reaffirmed their determination to hold out for fully integrated seating on buses. Their refusal to ride the buses led to the suspension of service July 1, but the Cities Transit Company has since announced plans to resume operations over routes serving white neighborhoods.

BUS FINE SUSPENDED

MIAMI, Fla.—Charged with "breach of peace" because he refused to move to the rear of a Miami bus, Rudolph Reid, 19, was fined $50 and costs or 24 days in jail, but the sentence was suspended. "I hope this is the last I'll hear of bus segregation," said Judge Francis Sobieski. "We're going to file suit in Federal Court to do away with it," said Reid.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The Manager of the Tallahassee bus company declared last week business is "picking up" but added the boycott of city buses by local Negroes is still "very effective."

Charles Carter declared that business "is stlil 40 per cent lower than at this time last year." The buses were boycotted May 29 in protest over the arrest of two co-eds from all Negro Florida A. and M. college who refused to move to the rear of a segregated vehicle.

The company was forced out of business July 1 but returned its coaches to the streets Aug. 1 after a "ride-the-bus campaign by the Chamber of Commerce gained additional white patrons.

Carter said the average daily passenger load is around 2,500. He said some 400 to 600 Negroes are included, 'much less" than before the boycott.

Meanwhile, 10 Negro leaders of the movement will go on trial in Tallahassee next week on charges of operating car pools without proper licenses. Among them is Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter-Civic council and the leader of the boycott.

22 Negro Leaders Arrested

Herald Miami, Fla. p.12c

Boycott Case Scope Widens

Sat. 10-5-56

By Herald Wire Services

TALLAHASSEE — The city Thursday arrested the entire executive committee of the Negro Inter-Civic Council on charges of illegally operating a transportation system for Negroes boycotting local buses.

The charges were placed against 22 Negroes and the council as a whole. Trial of the cases was set for Oct. 17.

Earlier, the city had arrested 10 individuals, including Council President C. K. Steele who also is local head of the NAACP, on individual charges of operating motor vehicles for hire without obtaining a state license.

These cases had been scheduled for trial Thursday morning after two earlier postponements. The city unexpectedly dropped these charges, though, and filed the broader charges against the council and 22 members.

The broader charges incorporate various transportation ordinances of the city of Tallahassee rather than the state "for hire" law. The council had contended the city had no jurisdiction over state "for hire" laws.

City Judge John Rudd Thursday subpoenaed the records of six service stations, all operated by Negroes.

Ralph Hadley, operator of one of the service stations whose records were subpoenaed, told authorities he did not keep records. Hadley went through the list of defendants and said he had sold gasoline to five of them. He was asked when the car pool drivers stopped paying by cash and started making their payments with checks.

Two new attorneys entered the case Thursday. The city hired Mark Hawes of Jacksonville, former assistant state attorney general to assist City Prosecutor Edward Hill. The council brought in NAACP attorney Francisco Rodriguez, Tampa, to assist local Negro attorney Therese Lindsey.

The arrests arose out of a boycott of city buses in a dispute over segregated seating which began May 28. Cities Transit Co. was forced out of business during July by the boycott but resumed operations Aug. 2 on new routes.

The original charges were filed after Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin ruled that car pool operations financed by the council violated the state "for hire" laws requiring operators of public transportation vehicles to have special licenses.

Steele, however, has charged the arrests were part of an effort to force Negroes to ride the buses.

NEGROES DROP CAR POOL AFTER COURT RULING

Daily Tribune Miami 10-23-56

Tallahassee, Fla., Oct. 23 (AP) —The Negro Inter Civic council said today it had abandoned the car pool it has sponsored to provide transportation for Negroes boycotting buses in protest against segregated seating.

The Rev. C. M. Steele, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said "the war is not over. We are still walking."

Chicago, Ill.

The council voted to drop the car pool at a mass meeting of the boycotters last night. The action followed Saturday's conviction in City court of the council and 21 of its officers and members on charges of operating an illegal transportation system. The council has indicated the verdict will be appealed. City Judge Rudd sentenced each of the defendants to pay a fine of $500 or serve 60 days in jail. The jail terms were suspended.

11 Negroes Face Car Pool Counts In Tallahassee

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Oct. 3 (AP) —The City Commission voted today to pay a special prosecutor a $4,000 fee for prosecuting Tallahassee's bus boycott car pool cases. The special prosecutor is Mark Hawes of Tampa.

Eleven Negroes, among them the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Intercivic Council which is sponsoring the Negro boycott of buses in protest against segregated seating, will go on trial in City Court tomorrow. They are cars which did not have "for hire" licenses.

Steele also is president of the Tallahassee Chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

The car pool was set up by the Intercivic Council to provide transportation for the bus boycotters who have refused to ride buses since May 28. State Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin ruled the car pool vehicles must carry "for hire" licenses because they are engaged primarily in public transportation.

New Attack On Miami Bus Bias

Defender Sat. 10-27-56 p.1

MIAMI — (INS) — Four Negro women have filed a suit in Miami federal court seeking to have city and state bus segregation laws declared unconstitutional.

Atty. G. E. Graves, jr., representing the four petitioners, asked Saturday that the court render its decision on the merits of the case, rather than by actual trial.

He said any remedy other than a directed verdict would "involve a multiplicity of suits and would cause further injury, damage and inconvenience to the plaintiffs. . ."

The suit was filed in behalf of Eleanor M. Fair, Maggie Garmon, Gloria Matthews and Alice Jackson.

Chicago

Miss Fair said she was arrested July 8 for refusing to move to the rear of a bus and the other three stated they had been forced to take seats in the rear of public transportation vehicles.

Named as defendants in the action were the Miami Transit co., the city of Miami and individual city commissioners.

Graves asked that the case be given early consideration and charged local bus segregation is based solely on the racial origin of the rider.

Protestors of Fla. bus segregation urgently need funds

Afro-American Sat. 11-10-56 Baltimore, Md.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The Inter-Civic Council, 803 Flora St., this city, sends an urgent plea for financial assistance to all groups and individuals throughout the nation who support the stand they are taking against segregation in Florida's capital city.

Recently 21 members or supporters of the ICC were fined $500 apiece for operating a car pool in connection with the bus segregation protest movement they have led since the first of June.

They are desperately in need of funds to appeal the cases of the 21 defendants and to continue to carry out the protest movement which had united the people of Tallahassee in the struggle for civil rights as nothing in history has done.

Judge Scolds Bus Boycotter For Attitude

Advertiser Sat. 10-20-56 Montgomery, Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Oct. 19 (AP) —A Negro witness was ordered by City Judge John Rudd today to be more respectful as the prosecution attempted to show that the Negro Inter Civic Council financed transportation for bus boycotters.

P. 8-a

The council and 21 of its members are on trial on charges of operating an illegal transportation system to provide rides for Negroes boycotting city buses as a protest against segregated seating.

John Payne, a filling station operator, was questioned by special prosecutor Mark Hawes as to who had paid him for gasoline put in cars allegedly operated as part of the council's car pool.

Payne nodded frequently in response to questions in spite of being instructed by Rudd to "sit up straight" and answer audibly. Rudd finally called a halt to Hawes' questioning and said to the witness:

"John, you're not trying to be disrespectful are you? When I ask you a question, answer 'Yes, Sir, or No, Sir'."

TEO RECESSES

Two recesses were called while Payne was taken aside by the Negro defense attorneys. The service station operator then returned to the stand and withdrew an earlier denial that he had put gas in a car owned by one of the defendants and charged the cost to the Inter Civic Council.

Payne said he had been confused because the car had been driven into his station by the defendant's wife on one occasion.

Earlier, several operators of automobile service establishments testified they were paid by council officials for services and merchandise.

The city contends the car pool competes illegally with city buses and taxicab companies.

The car pool has operated for nearly five months—almost since start of the boycott which was touched off when two Negro women students of Florida A. & M. University were arrested for sitting toward the front of a bus. Charges against the women were later dropped.

World P. 1 Wed. 10-24-56 B'ham, Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The Tallahassee Inter-Civic Council and 21 individual defendants were found guilty Saturday of illegally operating a car pool for Nearoes boycotting city buses.

The boycott which forced suspension of bus service in Florida's capital city for several weeks last spring, was called in protest over segregation seating.

City Judge Rudd sentenced each defendant to a $500 fine or 60 days in jail. He also handed each a mandatory 60 day term, but suspended this judgement and ordered a year's probation for each instead.

Execution of the sentences was delayed pending a motion for a new trial, which defense attorneys said will be filed.

The jurist, handling the case without a jury, delayed only 15 minutes after testimony was completed before announcing the verdict. He said he asked for "divine guidance" in arriving at a fair pronouncement.

The 21 car pool drivers including the entire nine-man executive committee of the inter civic council, were arrested for operating their vehicles without "for hire" tags.

The trial opened last Wednesday and dragged over three and a half days with the prosecution calling some 30 witnesses to the stand to prove that the car pool was a commericial operation functioning without a franchise.

The defense did not put any witnesses on the stand but attempted to prove through cross examination that no money actually changed hands.

Florida Negro Group Abandons Car Pool

Journal Mon. 10-22-56 Montgomery, Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — The Negro Inter Civic Council said today it had abandoned the car pool it has sponsored to provide transportation for Negroes boycotting buses in protest against segregated seating.

However, the Rev. C. M. Steele, president of the council and head of the Tallahassee chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said "The war is not over. We are still walking."

Dan Speed, chairman of the council's transportation committee, said, "We not only are not offering transportation, but we are not even offering advice."

The council voted to drop its sponsorship of the car pool at a mass' meeting of the boycotters last night. The action followed Saturday's conviction in city court of the council and 21 of its officers and members on charges of operating an illegal transportation system. The council has indicated the verdict will be appealed.

City Judge John Rudd sentenced each defendant ot pay a fine of $500 or serve 60 days in jail. He sentenced each to 60 days in jail, but suspended the jail term and put each on probation for one year.

Francisco A. Rodriguez, Tampa attorney who directed the defense, advised ending sponsorship of the car pool.

"Each person is free to ride whom he pleases in his car, but he must act without the assistance of a motor pool by the Inter Civic Council," Rodriguez said.

Steele said that although the council no longer will direct car pool operations "We must each and all of us pick up each and all the folks we see walking in protest of segregation on city buses."

Bus-Boycott Leaders Drop Car-Pool System

Courier-Journal P. 3 Tues. 10-23-56 Louisville, Ky.

Tallahassee, Fla., Oct. 22 (AP)—The Negro Inter Civic Council announced today it has abandoned its car-pool system, but that it is continuing its boycott of city buses until its fight for integrated seating has been won.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, council president, declared: "The war is not over. We are still walking."

The council decided to drop sponsorship of the car pool after conviction of the council and 21 of its officers and members in City Court Saturday.

The defendants were fined a total of $11,000 by City Judge John Rudd on charges of operating an illegal transportation system. Rudd also sentenced each of the defendants to 60 days in jail, but suspended the jail term and put each on probation for a year.

Steele urged the boycotters to "fight on and on." He said that while the council no longer will direct car-pool operations, "we must each and all of us pick up each and all the folks we see walking in protest of segregation on city buses."

Francisco A. Rodriguez, Tampa attorney who directed the defense at the four-day car-pool trial, advised ending sponsorship of the car pool and urged the boycotters to accept Rudd's decision "without rancor and without bitterness."

"Each person is free to ride whom he pleases in his car, but he must act without the assistance of a motor pool by the Inter Civic Council," he said.

Florida Negroes Fined For Forming Car Pool

Herald Tribune Mon. 10-21-56 New York, N.Y. P. 2

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Oct. 20 (AP).—City Judge John Rudd today found twenty-one members of the Negro Inter Civic Council and the council itself guilty of operating an illegal transportation system.

He fined each $500 and sentenced them to sixty days in jail but suspended the jail sentence and placed them on probation for a year. The sentence was stayed pending a defense motion for a new trial which is expected by Oct. 24.

The judge's decision was not accompanied by an opinion.

"Based on the law and the facts the court finds the defendants guilty as charged," he said.

The charges against the defendants arose from operation of a car pool to provide transportation for Negroes boycotting the city buses in protest against segregated seating.

Special City Prosecutor Mark Hawes told the court that if the council members were acquitted, licensed transportation systems would be in "serious jeopardy."

Defense attorney Francisco Rodriguez told the court the Inter Civic Council car pool does not fall within the definition of transportation "for hire." Part of the trial testimony revolved around the fact the car-pool automobiles carry no "for hire" tags.

Immediate appeal to be filed

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 12-27-56

By ELIZABETH M. OLIVER
(Earlier trial stories inside)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Each of the 21 defendants was found guilty of violating the municipal for-hire ordinance, Saturday, at 11 a.m. by Judge John Rudd. He fined each one of them $500, gave each one a suspended sentence of 60 days in jail, and one year on probation.

Through their attorneys, Theries Lindsay and Francisco A. Rodriques, all of the defendants announced that they would immediately appeal the case to a higher court.

Spectators, leaving the courtroom in a driving rain, walked toward their homes in sodden clothes, unless they had umbrellas, paying no attention to the empty buses rolling by.

All continued to vow they would not ride the bus until the segregated seating plan was abandoned.

JUDGE RUDD stated: "No case has ever absorbed me more than this one. None has ever taxed my capacity more. I have called upon Divine guidance for aid many times."

He stressed the fact that his verdict would be the law until overruled by a higher court and asked that the people abide by the law as citizens and Christians.

He also stated that when and if a higher court should reverse his decision, he would expect others to abide by that court's decision.

THE FOUR-DAY trial ended Saturday as 75 spectators braved the drenching downpour of chilling rain to hear the verdict, which each one knew would come.

The city rested its case Friday at 4:30 p.m. after offering as evidence portions of the injunction petition filed by the Inter-Civic Council's attorneys Monday.

Mr. Lindsay, one of the attorneys for the defense, had drawn up the petition and had gone into the United States district court for the north district of Florida to enjoin the prosecution.

In this case, the petition was filed on the ground of right of free speech as protected by the 1st Amendment and charging that the U.S. Constitution was being violated.

THE FEDERAL District Court ruled through Judge Dozier Devance that it did not have jurisdiction over the case in question, indicating that should the defendants be convicted, it probably could assume jurisdiction and would be ready to hear the case.

The petition to the Federal court was offered in evidence Friday to show that the defense had admitted that they had established a car pool and that gas has been furnished as alleged.

This was one of the issues which the prosecution was seeking to establish in its proceedings in the Municipal Court of the City of Tallahassee.

ACTUALLY, the alleged admission was not as damaging as Prosecutor Mark Hawes claimed, but was admittedly of some propaganda value but of no legal value, since it was incumbent upon the city to show that payments had been received by the defendants.

On Saturday Mr. Rodriques, the second defense counsel, argued to establish the invalidity of the charges. He accused the prosecution of twisting the law, likening the situation to putting a square peg in a round hole.

Saying that a misdemeanor had been stretched to the proportions of a major crime, he accused the city of creating a monstrosity.

He cautioned the court to weigh the matter heavily in considering a verdict, saying that it would be a dark day for justice if it should allow the law to be twisted or turned to say that citizens could not transport family, friends, or anyone in their cars as they saw fit.

STATING THAT no one had violated any law, since not one of the car pool drivers had received any money for services, he charged that the prosecution's case was bereft of logic.

He said that the prosecution's claims, if found valid, would represent a peculiar and strange interpretation of the law, would deprive citizens of the right to use that which is his.

He further stated that if the court were permitted to construe the law so loosely that the practice would engulf eventually the lives of the city's children and their children's children and would sound the death knell to all of their rights.

Saying that he did not believe the court so unwise as to engage in verbal or mental magic, he preferred to think the court realized that to deprive the defendants of their rights would be to deprive all Tallahassee defendants of their rights.

HE DEFINED a business, such as the car pool had been accused of conducting, as an enterprize which was organized, received compensation from the one served and that the server received money for his service.

"How then in the name of common sense can you call the car pool a business? How in the name of consistency, he asked, "can you claim they were operating for hire, when not one witness testified that he paid any driver here any money?"

THE SECOND day of the trial was consumed by Prosecutor Hawes attempting to establish through police witnesses the fact that there had been indirect payments to car pool operators for services rendered persons who otherwise would have to walk.

The prostcution was trying to prove that while the riders may not have made direct payments to the drivers, they have made indirect donation by contributing to the collections at mass mettings which have been held under the auspices of the ICC.

The defense, on the other hand, set forth to show that no direct payments of any kind havt been made to any of the defendants and therefore the prosecution could not prove that the defendants are engaged in a business.

THREE OF the prosecution's many witnesses, Officer John Layman, Sergeant Kelley and Patrolman Burl Peacock, nonplused Mr. Hawts by being unable to offer specific evidence on the operation of the car pool.

Typical of the exchanges between prosecutor and witness is the following portion of the testimony between Hawes and Kelley:

Hawes: "On Aug. 23 did you have an occasion to see Defendent C. K. Steele?"

Kelley: "I don't know if it it was that date or not."

Hawes: "Was it on Aug. 28?"

Kelley: "I don't know."

Hawes: "Was it anytime in August that you had oicasion to observe Defendent Steele?"

Kelley: "I don't know?"

Hawes: "Do you have any notes on your observations which might tell you when in Ausgust you observed Steele?

Kelley: "It was in September about the 29 and 31."

Hawes: "Where do you see Defendent Steele whenever he was arrested, whatever date it was?"

Kelley: "It was on a certain corner. . . ."

(Here exasperated Hawes cut the witness off.)

"Hawes: "What was Steele doing."

KELLEY: "He was loading some people in front of Speed's grocery.

Hawes: "How many people were in the car?"

Kelley: "I don't know."

Hawes: "What was the license number?"

Kelley: "I don't know."

Hawes: "About and around Speed's grocery describe the activity."

Kelley: "The majority of time I was out there, there'd be various people around there, getting seats and waiting."

Hawes: "What was the activitiy about and around the automobiles?"

Kelley: "Well, it's my idea that. . . ."

He pointed his finger at the witness.

Hawes: "Don't give me any of your ideas or your opinions I don't want your ideas. If you saw anything, say so. If you didn't see anything, don't say anything."

HAWES promised the court that on the following day of the trial, he would reduce the number of witnesses called by the prosecution to five or six.

Defense Attorney Rodriques expressed himself as being amenable to the idea.

Bishop Ward D. Nichols again attended the trial and his appearanie was received with enthusiasm by the 125 or so colored persons who attended. Only 12 white spectators showed up.

The bishop attended the afternoon session accompanied by the Rev. A. L. Bennett, presiding elder of the Quincy District; the Rev. Walter S. White, presiding elder, Tallahassee District: the Rev. H. McNeal Harris, pastor of Bethel AME Church; John H. Cobb and Lewis T. Stokes.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — An additional blindfold was tied over Justice Goddess Minerva's eyes Wenesday as the boycott car pool trial opened here Thursday.

All seats were filled on the "colored" side of the courtroom. Colored spectators lined the walls, sat in window sills, many students were turned away at the door.

Yet on the "white" side were but a handful of spectators, plenty of empty seats.

Marc R. Hawes, special city assistant prosecutor, said, "Tell all the witnesses to come inside, please, suh" (to the policeman at the door).

This reply echoed among the empty seats lining the aisle immediately beside him:

THUS BEGAN the trial for 22 of the leaders of the four-month-old bus boycott on charges of violating a city for hire car ordinance by transporting walkers to various destinations.

Ten of those facing trial are members of the executive board of the Inter-Civic Council, which has spearheaded this movement to wipe out segregation on the city bus line.

Seats on the right side of the main aisle were reserved for colored spectators, on the left for white. During the day not more than 25 white spectators were present. More than 100 colored persons were turned away.

CITY JUDGE JOHN RUDD again tossed out a motion for quashing the charges against the 22.

"The defense moves to dismiss on three grounds," stated Francisco A. Rodriques, Tampa lawyer who was assigned to the case by the NAACP.

Mr. Rodriques was the first to speak as the trials got under way. Judge Rudd immediately denied the motion, which Mr. Rodriques indicated had three points:

1. That we are actually not engaged in a business enterprize but rather in a protest movement in which we are voicing our objections to the segregation practices of the Tallahassee transit lines.

(a.) THE USE OF CARS and other vehicles is done on a voluntary basis and does not involve remuneratoin directly or indirectly.

(b.) To thwart this movement in any form would be tantamount to depriving the defendants of their Constitutional right of freedom of speech.

2. That the prosecution has nailed to furnish us with a complete list of witnesses to be used by the city of Tallahassee.

3. The warrants are vague, indefinite and lacking in specifity.

Belligerent from the beginning, City Prosecutor Hawes snapped: "I object to the filing of the motion. It does not comply with the court's order. The offense is a continuing offense. The defense should have sought a bill of particulars.

Judge Rudd added: "The motion is denied without explanation. I can not see where the case has been prejudiced in any way."

COURT OFFICIALS said about 75 witnesses have been called to testify. The morning session, interrupted by many "5-minute" recesses, was spent largely in swearing in these witnesses.

Ironically, Judge Rudd after bringing witnesses "under the rule", and indicating they were not to talk with anyone about the trial, said:

"It is the duty of a good American citizen not to listen, hear or talk about the trial outside the court. Witnesses are to remain outside the hearing room of the court," he said.

MR. RODRIQUES objected to all of the city testimony and exhibits. Judge Rudd quickly overruled all his protests except two.

Det. Sgt. R. J. Strickland, who testified during most of the afternoon session, said that a driver he arrested during a crackdown admitted he'd haule up to 40 passengers a day in a private station wagon, on orders of the ICC.

Mr. Hawes brought forth checks drawn on the ICC account at the Capital City bank. From these and the deposit slips and signature cards handed over by Godfrey Smith, executive vice president of the bank, he brought out that the ICC had been doing a "tremendous business" since May.

THE VOLUMNIOUS batch of checks each bore two of three signatures of ICC officials, the Rev. C. K. Steele, the Rev. J. Metz Rollings, Dr. M. C. Williams. The majority of the checks were made out to filling stations where the car pool operators charged gas.

Sergeant Strickland testified that Matthew Adams, one of the defendants, admitted that he was asked to drive a station wagon in the pool by ICC President C. K. Steele.

The officer said he observed over a period of time that the car pool began its operation around Dan Speed's grocery early in the morning, "about going-to-work time," picked up passengers, took them away and returned to get more.

HE SAID he also observed that at the early morning hour people sat in chairs which were lined up on the sidewalk, waited there until they could be placed in cars to be driven to their destinations.

Reading the ICC diary which was confiscated by the city from executive secretary (Dr.) M. C. Williams, Mr. Hawes informed the court that the pool had 63 cars and 2 station wagons in June, that there were plans for purchasing a new station wagon, that fines for car pool operators were paid from ICC bank funds.

Judge Rudd overruled Mr. Rodriques' objection to the reading of the diary but permitted only such information that indicated that the ICC was operating a car pool.

High point in the trial came when Rodriques objected to Patrick Whittaker, Tampa law partner of the Hawes firm, being present and too "buddy-buddy" with Hawes outside the court.

Claimed Rodriques, "I understood Pat Whittaker was supposed to be in the role of "Amicus Curiae," a friend of the court.

"I would like the court to clarify his status at this time."

MR. WHITTAKER, an elderly, gray haired man, is the legendary and dramatic criminal lawyer, well known in the State of Florida for removing his false teeth in court, winning cases by roaring and charging about the floor, entertaining spectators.

"I am a member of the law firm employing Mr. Hawes and I have been hired, too," he explained.

"I knew nothing about the case until this morning, however," added Whittaker.

Saying that he had to go assist his brother elsewhere, Thursday, he said: "I ain't going to be able to participate."

"WE REGRET that, Mr. Whittaker," said Rodriques, bowing graciously. "I was looking forward to a pleasant association here."

Judge Rudd indicated to Rodriques that this was not a social engagement; it was a court of justice. Social graces would be allowed outside on social occasion," said the judge.

Spectators laughed aloud. The Tallahassee radio repeated the performance throughout the day.

The first witness, Charles L. Carter, manager of the City Transit Bus Company and its vice president for eight years, testified that from 1954 to 1955 the company averaged $15,500 per month.

DAILY REPORTS showed, Carter said, that the A and M Frenchtown Route, which is almost 100 per cent colored, had an intake of $180 per day prior to June, 1956. Since then it has averaged but $18 a day.

Carter's testimony began with Hawes laying the legal groundwork for the city's claim that the car pool operated by the ICC amounted to a public transportation system financed by the council and operated over regular routes.

The ICC maintains that the car pool is incidental to the boycott, that its operation is without organization. That no money is taken in fares.

FINAL NOTE of the trial indicated that it would last three or four days.

21 IN NEGRO BUS BOYCOTT FINED FOR CAR POOL

Tribune
Jun. 10-21-56
Chicago, Ill.

Tallahassee, Fla., Oct. 20 (AP) — City Judge John Rudd today found 21 members of the Negro Inter Civic council and the council itself guilty of operating an illegal transportation system.

He fined each $500 and sentenced them to 60 days in jail but suspended the jail sentence and placed them on probation for a year. The sentence was stayed pending a defense motion for a new trial which is expected by Oct. 24.

The Judge's decision was not accompanied by an opinion.

Segregation Protest

"Based on the law and the facts the court finds the defendants guilty as charged," he said.

The charges against the defendants arose from operation of a car-pool to provide transportation for Negroes boycotting the city buses in protest against segregated seating.

Special City Prosecutor Mark Hawes told the court that if the council members were acquitted, licensed transportation systems would be in "serious jeopardy."

No "Fire Hire" Signs

Defense Atty. Francisco Rodriguez told the court the Inter Civic council car pool does not fall within the definition of transportation "for hire." Part of the trial testimony revovled around the fact the car pool automobiles carry no "for hire" tags.

Florida NAACP Probe 'Beginning To Roll'

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Nov. 13 (AP)—A legislative committee was told today that an investigation of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People was "beginning to roll" and that some concrete facts would be submitted at a Dec 11 meeting.

P. 2d

The progress report was made by Mark Hawes, chief attorney for the interim committee which was set up to investigate the NAACP and other organizations.

Montgomery

"We have made some specific efforts which I would not bring into the open at this time for fear that they might hamper fruitful results, but the foundation has been laid and when we meet again we will have a concrete report to bring to you," Hawes said.

The committee heard preliminary reports from Hawes and Chief investigator John Ceasty on progress of their work, then went into a closed session.

At conclusion of the closed meeting, Chairman Henry Land announced that the committee had hired Tllahassee Detective Sgt. R. J. Strickland as an assistant investigator.

Strickland directed the investigation of the Tallahassee car pool cases which resulted in conviction of the Negro Inter Civic Council and 21 of its members recently on a charge of operating an illegal transportation system during the Tallahassee bus boycott by Negro riders.

Defendants in Car Pool Case Post $22,000 in Bonds—Council Files an Appeal

Sun. 12-9-56

Special to The New York Times.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Dec. 8 —The Negro Inter-Civic Council and twenty-one of its car pool operators posted bonds today totaling $22,000. They filed appeals in Circuit Court from their convictions in city court on charges of operating an illegal transportation system.

The twenty-one Negroes included most of the officers of the council. The council itself was also found guilty. The council and each defendant were given the same sentence of $500 fine or sixty days in jail. A mandatory jail sentence of sixty days additional was suspended and each defendant was put on a year's probation.

The Negroes made bond shortly before 11 A. M., the deadline set by Municipal Judge John Rudd. Judge Rudd had extended the bond deadline twice but yesterday he said, "I have been as lenient as possible, but by setting the exact hour I am putting a final deadline in the matter."

One defendant posted a $1,000 cash bond. The others were backed by property owners.

Bonds Double Fine Total

All bonds were double the amount of the fines each received. Posting of the bonds and filing of the appeal stays the sentences until the higher courts rule on whether the pool operation was illegal under city ordinances.

The Negroes started the car pool after beginning a bus boycott in protest of segregated seating on May 28. The bus company suspended operation for a month after the boycott began. But it resumed service on Aug. 1 after a "ride-the-bus" campaign by local white residents.

The boycott is still on but is not totally effective. Many Negroes are riding the buses, but the bus company says business is still below par.

The city charged the Negroes with operating a public transportation system without a franchise. The Negroes replied that the car pool operation was incidental to a protest against segregated seating and was not a for-hire venture.

Peace Reigns in Clinton

Special to The New York Times.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Dec. 8—Clinton people went about their Christmas shopping today much as those in any other small American town on a Saturday.

This was in contrast to the recent tenseness following the beating of the Rev. Paul Turner, pastor of Clinton's First Baptist Church. He was attacked when he escorted six Negro children back to the integrated Clinton High School Tuesday.

The police will cruise the Clinton High School area when the school reopens Monday. It was shut down following the violence Tuesday.

Nine Negro children are expected to return to classes then. One Negro girl is still in a hospital because of illness. There were twelve Negro students enrolled when integration started, but two withdrew several weeks ago. Nearly 700 white boys and girls are enrolled.

D. J. Brittain Jr., the principal, said the wearing of pro-segregation buttons "by a minority" of students was a serious problem. He said opinion would be sought as to its legality in view of the Federal court injunction against interference with segregation.

The buttons are lettered: "Keep our white schools white."

Mr. Brittain and some teachers believe that "flaunting" such buttons has contributed to keeping Negro students away from school.

Negroes Appeal Pool Conviction

Journal + Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Dec. 8 (AP)—The Negro Intercivic Council and 21 of its car pool operators Saturday posted bond of $22,000 and filed appeals in Leon County Circuit Court from their city court conviction for operating a transportation system without a franchise.

Sun. 12-19-56

They made bond shortly before the 11 a.m. (EST) deadline set by Municipal Judge John A. Rudd, who had originally called for their bonds by last Tuesday but granted an extension.

One of the $1,000 bonds was posted in cash; others were signed by property owners. The bonds were double the $500 fines imposed on each defendant.

Jail sentences of 60 days were provided as alternatives to payment of the fines.

Posting of bonds and filing of the appeals stays the sentences until higher courts rule on legality of the car pool operation.

The car pool was set up as part of a bus boycott movement by the council.

Suit Is Filed Against Segregation on Buses

U.S. Court Here Gets Petition

4 Negro Women Seek Integration

By RONALD T. YORK
Herald Staff Writer

A federal court suit seeking integration of riders on Miami Transit buses was filed Friday.

The action would enjoin the bus company from complying with city and state segregation laws.

It also would have state and city segregation laws declared unconstitutional.

The petitioners — four Negro women — contend bus segregation laws deny them their rights under the United States laws and 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

The suit, filed by Negro attorney G. E. Graves Jr., seeks a decision by the court on the merits of the case, rather than by actual trial.

It also asks that it be advanced on the court calendar for early consideration.

Local bus segregation is based solely on the racial origin of the rider, the suit asserts, and is a denial of "the equal protection of the law guaranteed everyone."

Any remedy other than federal court determination would, "involve a multiplicity of suits and would cause further injury, damage and inconvenience to the plaintiffs and those similarly situated," the suit asserts.

Graves specified that it is a class action, intended to benefit all Negro bus passengers.

The suit notes that white passengers must seat from the front. Negroes are required to fill rear seats first on penalty of being arrested and jailed.

Miami Transit Co. officials have frequently been quoted as saying they are operating under Florida state laws and will not alter their operation until the laws are changed.

One of the plaintiffs, Eleanor M. Fair, charged she was sent to city jail July 8 after refusing orders of a bus driver and a policeman that she move to a rear seat.

Maggie Garmon, another plaintiff, charged she was forced to take a rear bus seat Oct. 3 after a policeman threatened her with jail.

The other two, Gloria Matthews and Alice Jackson, asserted they were ordered by a bus driver Thursday from seats at the front to the rear.

The Ground On Which Grandfather Prayed

Here is the story of King Solomon DuPont, militant pastor and leader of Florida's bus boycott movement.

"My father's father was a slave who resented the whole idea of slavery, and I dislike discrimination in any form," the Rev. King Solomon DuPont told the AFRO recently after he was released from the Tallahassee city police station.

The militant bus boycott leader, a successful businessman for 21 years an AME minister, and now pastor of Fountain Chapel Church here, was requested to report to the police station Monday, where he was required to give information concerning the activities of the boycotters' Inter Civic Council.

Dan Speed, another member of the council, was also interrogated by the police, whose tactics were termed "Gestapo methods."

BORN IN Midway, Florida, 12 miles from Tallahassee, he said, "my grandfather set the pattern of resentment against discrimination which has been inherited by all of his descendants.

"He escaped from his master, and he and his brother stayed in the swamp for many months.

"His brother became tired and hungry and cold and he returned to the big house, but my grandfather stayed on."

He also decided to return but only after he had contrived a plan to obtain his freedom.

For many days he split fence rails for the slave master at night and did his regular work in the day. At that time 100 rails brought only 25 cents.

"WHEN MY grandfather had split enough rails to make the total sum earned $37.50 he asked his owner to check the rails.

" 'What is the value? he asked.

" 'Archie, I've had a lot of trouble with you,' the slave master said. 'And I have just got $25 for you.'

"My grandfather had his master's name, Archie Skulls.

" 'I will let you go free for these rails as you request," the owner said, "but you can not wear my name. I'll give you 24 hours to get a name.' "

The Rev. DuPont said his father went back to the swamp. He fell upon the ground near a spring. He prayed and the name DuPont came to him.

"Archie returned to his master and said: 'My name will be DuPont, King Solomon DuPont.'

"FROM THEN on that name has come down through the family and now it is my name. We still own the ground upon which grandfather DuPont prayed, because he went to work and earned it.

"Now, every 20th of May we give a banquet there on that very spot."

Commenting on the persistence of the police department in intimidating bus boycotters, the Rev. Mr. DuPont said, "We will just have to continue to be determined to win our rights regardless of what they do.

"It is unfair, we know, but when you are right, victory will surely be yours."

Rev. DuPont has constantly been an inspiration to the thousands of boycotters who walk to work, and who are the backbone of what he calls "passive resistance" to racial "oppression."

As they trudge as far as six miles to and from their homes they often recall his words:

"If they stop the motor pool, I wouldn't ride the bus. If they put all the whites on top and tell us to take the inside seats, I wouldn't ride."

"When you get tired of walking, stop and pray awhile," he has told them many times, and the Lord will renew your strength."

One of the boycotters who remembers what Rev. DuPont has advised said: "Am I tired? Why, a long time ago my soul was tired of this thing. Now that my feet and legs are tired, my soul is resting."

22 Face Trial in Boycott

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Oct. 4 (UP)—The City arrested the executive committee of the Negro Inter-Civic Council today on charges of illegally operating a transportation system for Negroes boycotting local buses.

The charges were placed against twenty-two Negroes and the council as a whole. Trial was set for Oct. 17.

Earlier, the City had arrested ten individuals, including C. K. Steele, president, on charges of operating motor vehicles for hire without a state license.

The City dropped the earlier charges today and filed the broader charges against the executive board.

The broader charges involve Tallahassee ordinances. The counil had contended the City had no jurisdiction over state "for hire" laws.

The arrests arose out of a bus boycott over segregated seating that began May 28.

Tallahassee Seeks Bus Boycott Probe

TALLAHASSEE — A $50,000 search by a legislative commitee into the activities of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in Florida probably will be launched in the capital city.

Y.120-C

The NAACP investigation committee was asked by the Tallahassee City Commission Wednesday to probe "organizations which advocate courses of conduct violating laws of the state of Florida."

Rep. Henry Land, chairman of the legislative committee, said no action would be taken on the request until the committee has appointed an attorney and its chief investigator.

Sen. Dewey M. Johnson, of Quincy, said he thought the Tallahassee City Commission ought to "pinpoint just what organizations it has in mind."

However, there was no doubt the City Commission's letter asking for the probe was aimed at the Tallahassee Inter-Civic Council which has directed a four-months bus boycott by most of the city's Negro population in protest against segregated seating on buses.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the council and president of the Tallahassee chapter of the NAACP is identified at the leader of the bus boycott.

Steele and several other Negroes appeared briefly when the probe committee coonvened but left before the letter from the City Commission was read.

In a closed session, the committee tentatively selected a chief counsel and chief investigator but refused to disclose their names until they have been interviewed by the entire committee.

Speculation is that Mark Hawes, Tampa lawyer, may be hired by the committee as its chief counsel. Hawes was recommended by Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin who told the committee "he would be excellent on cross-examination."

Hawes is now serving as a special prosecutor for the City of Tallahassee in cases involving Negro car pool drivers charged with illegally operating a transportation service in competition with city buses.

Chairman Land said it is possible the entire $50,000 appropriation may not be needed and he hoped "we can hold expenditures to between $30,000 and $40,000."

Land said the Tallahassee request is the only one received to date from any municipality for action from the committee but Rep. Cliff Herrell of Dade County told other members of the committee "I have received a basketful of anonymous letters."

Land said the committee expects to have to pay some informants for evidence and aid in conducting investigations of the NAACP or "any other organizatons."

Assistant Atty. Gen. George Owen advised the committee it could hold secret meetings to hear testimony from witnesses who desired ot avoid publicity and that it could ask the Circuit courts to order before the committee witnesses who ignored its subpoenas.

TRIAL WITNESS WARNED

Times P.-C

He Changes Early Testimony in Florida Bus Boycott Case

Sat. 10-20-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Oct. 19 (AP)—A Negro witness was ordered by City Judge John Rudd today to be more respectful as the prosecution attempted to show that the Negro Inter-Civic Council financed transportation for bus boycoters.

Times York

The council and twenty-one of its members are on trial on charges of operating an illegal transportation system to provide rides for Negroes boycotting city buses as a protest against segregated seating.

John Payne, a filling station operator, was questioned by Special Prosecutor Mark Hawes as to who had paid him for gasoline put in cars alleged to be operated as part of the council's car pool. He withdrew an earlier denial that he had put gas in a car owner by one of the defendants and charged the cost to the council.

Earlier, several operators of automobile service establishments testified they were paid by council officials for service and merchandise.

Hearing Oct. 17

Jail 22 Protest Leaders

Courier P.A.
Sat. 10-13-56
Pittsburgh, Pa.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—The city of Tallahassee has turned up its hole card and arrested 22 members of the executive board of the Inter-Civic Council which has been the main support of this city's four-month-long protest against jim-crow seating in city buses.

Whether or not bringing the protest leaders to trial on Oct. 17 will serve its purpose is a moot question at th's time.

However, the city has left no stone unturned and has not only placed charges against the 22 "leaders" but also against the council as a whole.

THE CITY had first moved in on ten people, including the Rev. C. K. Steele, considered locally as being the "brains" behind the entire affair.

After thinking over its move, the city dropped these charges and then "went for broke" by preferring charges against the Council's entire board.

The Council has long contended that the city has no jurisdiction over the state of Florida's "for hire" laws. The city, on the other hand, has accused the organization of operating vehicles for hire without benefit of a state license.

The Council has been running a car pool in conjunction with the protest against Tallahassee's segregated city buses.

Tension high in courtroom as bus boycotters convicted

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

Sat. 11-3-56

By ELIZABETH M. OLIVER

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—"Laura, I'm going to tell you about court manners so if you ever go into another court it won't go hard with you."

That is the manner in which Judge John Rudd spoke to Mrs. Laura Flucas, after halting court proceedings when she insisted upon referring to defendants in the bus boycott trial as "Mr." or "Mrs."

JUDGE RUDD ORDERED both Mrs. Flucas and John Payne, witnesses on Friday, to say "yes, sir" and "no, sir," although there is no Florida law requiring witnesses to do so.

And the prosecutors repeatedly referred to the defendants by name without the the use of the common courties of "Mr.," "Mrs.," or "Miss."

Mrs. Flucas, an employee of the Board of Health Laboratory at W. T. Edwards Tuberculosis Hospital on the Old Miccicucci Rd., was the first to take the stand.

She was questioned by Mark Hawes, special prosecutor for the city. She was expected to tell how she was driven to work regularly by certain car pool drivers.

IN ANSWER TO questions by Mr. Hawes, Mrs. Flucas told the court that she was a passenger in the car of Edward Irons, a Florida A. and M. University employee, on Aug. 1 when they were arrested.

She also testified that she had rode with Mrs. Irons, also a Florida A. and M. employee, but did not know either before they offered her a ride, explaining:

"I just ride with anybody who picks me up."

The prosecutor asked Mrs. Flucas if she knew "Bessie Irons" and also whether she knew "Ralph Coleman."

In reply, the witness testified that she knew "Mrs. Irons," but she didn't know "any 'Bessie Irons.'" In addition, she said she knew "Mr. Coleman" but didn't know "whether his name is 'Ralph Coleman' or not."

DURING THE questioning, Mrs. Flucas appeared to show signs of belligerence and was instructed by Judge Rudd to say "yes" and "no," and not to nod her head.

"Lauro," he said, "this is a microphone (referring to the microphone to the tape recorder) not a television. You have to speak and not nod your head."

Later, when the witness repeatedly referred to the defendants as "Mrs." or "Mr.," Judge Rudd stopped the court proceedings, stating:

"LAURA, I'm going to tell you about court manners so if you ever go into another court it won't go hard with you.

"The court stands for justice. When you address the court, you say 'yes sir' and 'no sir.' Now let me hear you answer the question."

For a full three minutes Mrs. Flucas sat with a bowed head and refused to answer a question directed at her by Mr. Hawes until the prosecutor and judge demanded an answer.

Finally, after much insistence, she uttered a faint "yes sir."

Upon dismissal from the stand, Judge Rudd ordered that Mrs. Flucas wait outside the courtroom until the session was over.

He was asked "if he had not received orders from car pool transportation chief Dan Speed that checks from the Inter-Civic Commission paid for his gas, and if he placed gas in the ICC cars.

Mr. Payne denied any such claims.

Hawes then said he would "refresh" Payne's memory by referring to a statement allegedly made by the witness at a previous hearing.

The witness said he didn't know what the questions were at the time.

THE JUDGE also accused Mr. Payne of "dragging his feet" when everyone was attempting to get through with the trial, making it clear that the witness should answer "yes sir" or "no sir."

Mr. Hawes repeatedly asked the witness: "Do you know what perjury is, John?"

After the judge and prosecutor failed to receive the desired response, a recess was declared. Upon returning to court, the red faced judge nearly cited the witness for contempt.

AS THE TRIAL came to a close near the end of the day, Judge Rudd told Mrs. Flucas and Mr. Payne:

"Your are looking at an estimate of government—not me as a man. I don't care if you never say 'sir' to me. It's the duty of all citizens to show respect to the court."

He then asked them to apologize to the court.

There were whispers of respect and sympathy throughout the courtroom for the two embarrassed, harassed witnesses.

One spectator was overheard saying: "Bless them. They are trying to be loyal."

LATER, MRS. FLUCAS told the AFRO that when she was called as a witness for the city, she felt put in an embarrassing position — having to testify against her people.

In addition, she said she did not quite understand the case at all.

Talking to Mr. Payne at his service station, he explained that he most regretted to have had to testify to information which may hurt his people.

"I was hurt to my heart to have had to be on the other side and not helping my friends. I did not know how the court works, but I did know I should be loyal to my friends, no matter what."

Heard Fri. 10-19-56 P. 2B Miami Fla.

TALLAHASSEE — (UP) — At least one driver in a car pool established by Negroes to boycott the city's segregated bus system was carrying his own family to town when arrested in a police crackdown, Detective Sgt. R. J. Strickland testified Thursday.

Strickland, under cross-examination by NAACP attorney Francisco Rodriguez, said officers watched Negro Henry T. Smith pick up passengers in the car pool for three days before arresting him. But when he was brought to the police station, it was found his four passengers were his wife, two daughters and a cousin.

Special city prosecutor Mark Hawes, Tampa, objected vigorously to the testimony which he said he "knew was coming next" when Rodriguez began questioning Strickland. The city is trying 21 Negro leaders, including Smith, and the Negro Inter Civic Council on charges of operating an illegal car pool to boycott the bus company because of its policy requiring Negroes to take seats in the rear of the buses.

Maximum penalty on the charges is a $500 fine or 60 days in jail or both.

Hawes called police officials and newspaper reporters to the stand to establish the city's claim the council operated its car pool on established routes, had regular pickup points and was financed through contributions made at the council's twice weekly mass meetings.

Police Chief Frank Stoutamire testified he warned grocer Dan Speed, the council's transportation chairman, that arrests would follow unless the car pool vehicles had city permits and "for hire" licenses.

"Speed told me we could go ahead and make the arrests and they would appeal all of them," Stoutamire said.

Rodriguez, of Tampa, brought out on cross examination that none of the passengers riding the pool cars admitted paying the drivers. He contended the car pool was not a business venture but was merely incidental to the boycott which began five months ago on the campus of the state Negro university when two coeds were arrested for sitting next to a white woman on a bus.

'Walk together, children,' sings Mrs. M. King

CHICAGO (ANP)—Mrs. Coretta King, of Montgomery, Ala., wife of Dr. Martin Luther King, proved to Chicago last week that her lovely soprano singing voice in music is equal to her husband's brilliant leadership in race relations.

The promising young soprano gave a concert in Olivet Baptist Church auditorium here. She was accompanied by Mrs. Minnie K. Scott, instructor of piano at Alabama State College.

Mrs. King delivered a brief speech telling of the "magnificent courage of the colored people of Montgomery."

"We are still walking and are in no way weary because we feel what we are doing is symbolic of the fight for the freedom of 16 million black Americans," she said.

A graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston, Mrs. King has studied under many outstanding music teachers and has sung with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Advertiser Sat. 10-20-56 Montgomery, Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Oct. 19 (AP) —A Negro witness was ordered by City Judge John Rudd today to be more respectful as the prosecution attempted to show that the Negro Inter Civic Council financed transportation for bus boycotters.

The council and 21 of its members are on trial on charges of operating an illegal transportation system to provide rides for Negroes boycotting city buses as a protest against segregated seating.

John Payne, a filling station operator, was questioned by special prosecutor Mark Hawes as to who had paid him for gasoline put in cars allegedly operated as part of the council's car pool.

Payne nodded frequently in response to questions in spite of being instructed by Rudd to "sit up straight" and answer audibly. Rudd finally called a halt to Hawes' questioning and said to the witness:

"John, you're not trying to be disrespectful are you? When I ask you a question, answer 'Yes, Sir, or No, Sir'."

TEO RECESSES

Two recesses were called while Payne was taken aside by the Negro defense attorneys. The service station operator then returned to the stand and withdrew an earlier denial that he had put gas in a car owned by one of the defendants and charged the cost to the Inter Civic Council.

Payne said he had been confused because the car had been driven into his station by the defendant's wife on one occasion.

Earlier, several operators of automobile service establishments testified they were paid by council officials for services and merchandise.

The city contends the car pool competes illegally with city buses and taxicab companies.

The car pool has operated for nearly five months—almost since start of the boycott which was touched off when two Negro women students of Florida A. & M. University were arrested for sitting toward the front of a bus. Charges against the women were later dropped.

Daily World Sun. 10-21-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The Tallahassee Inter-Civic Council and 21 individual defendants were found guilty Saturday of illegally operating a car pool for Negroes boycotting city buses.

The boycott which forced suspension of bus service in Florida's capital city for several weeks last spring, was called in protest over segregation seating.

City Judge Rudd sentenced each defendant to a $500 fine or 60 days in jail. He also handed each a mandatory 60 day term, but suspended this judgement and ordered a year's probation for each instead.

Execution of the sentences was delayed pending a motion for a new trial, which defense attorneys said will be filed.

The jurist, handling the case without a jury, delayed only 15 minutes after testimony was completed before announcing the verdict. He said he asked for "divine guidance" in arriving at a fair pronouncement.

The 21 car pool drivers including the entire nine-man executive committee of the inter civic council were arrested for operating their vehicles without "for hire" tags.

The trial opened last Wednesday and dragged over three and a half days with the prosecution calling some 30 witnesses to the stand to prove that the car pool was a commericial operation functioning without a franchise.

The defense did not put any witnesses on the stand but attempted to prove through cross examination that no money actually changed hands.

Negroes Halt Motor Pools In Tallahassee

Advertiser Oklahoma City Oklahoma

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Oct. 22 (AP) —The Negro Inter-Civic Council announced today it has abandoned its car pool system but that it is continuing its boycott of city buses until its fight for integrated seating has been won.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, council president, declared "the war is not over. We are still walking."

The council decided to drop sponsorship of the car pool following conviction of the council and 21 of its officers and members in city court Saturday.

The defendants were fined a total of $11,000 by City Judge John Rudd in charges of operating an illegal transportation system. Rudd also sentenced each of the defendants to 60 days in jail, but suspended the jail term and put each on probation for one year.

Dan Speed, chairman of the council's transportation committee, said, 'We not only are not offering transportation, but we are not even offering advice."

Steele urged the boycotters to "fight on and on." He said that while the council no longer will direct car pool operations "we must each and all of us pick up each other and all the folks we see walking in protest of segragation on city buses."

Francisco A. Rodriguez, Tampa attorney who drected the defense at the four-day car pool trial, advised ending sponsorship of the car pool, and urged the boycotters to accept Rudd's decision "without rancor and without bitterness."

Irked Tallahassee police intensify intimidation

Afro-American p. 13 Baltimore, Md.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The local police department has speeded up its intimidation again, mainly because they are furious that colored citizens have stood steadfast and firm in not returning to the segregated buses. 11-17-56

This is what Dr. M. C. Williams, executive secretary of the Inter-Civic Council reported in Chapter 10 of the ICC Diary, released recently.

He also pointed out that not only has the ICC given impetus to the colored community to resist race classification on buses here and has spearheaded the five-month old bus protest, but also it has stimulated interest and membership in other colored civic organizations.

ORGANIZATIONS WHICH formerly complained that none came to the meetings but the president and the secretary can now boast of six and seven hundred participants at their civic meetings.

The city of Tallahassee is planning to build a civic center which will include an auditorium and other recreational facilities. To finance this project the city proposed to increase the utility bill with a 10 percent tax.

Naturally since colored citizens' rates will increase along with all other citizens, the Civic League of Tallahassee (a colored civic organization) held a panel session with representatives of the Junior and Senior Chambers of Commerce and Advisory Board of the Civic Center to discuss participation in the center.

Through the encouragement of the ICC at its mass meetings there were colored citizens at this forum. (approximately 700.)

THE DIRECTOR of the southeastern section of the NAACP, Mrs. Ruby Hurley, gave the inspirational speech at the Nov. 4 Sunday mass meeting of the ICC.

She stated that the southern states could try to outlaw organizations such as the NAACP and ICC, but colored people in America will fight to the end by peaceful and legal means for their rights.

AS GUEST speaker at the Oct. 27 Sunday mass meeting, the Rev. Glenn Smiley, representative of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, presented a film, "Walking to Freedom," in which areas using nonviolent resistance to racial conflicts were featured.

This film emphasized that man has the desire for freedom and to live in dignity from the continents of India and Africa to the small southern towns of Montgomery, Ala., and Tallahassee, Fla.

Besides this moving film, the Rev. Mr. Smiley gave the inspirational speech for the evening, complimenting the group on the Christian, non-violent manner in which it was rejecting second class citizenship.

One of the grounds for such a recommendation on the city's part is the fact that Mr. Hayward was secretary to the transportation committee of the Inter-Civic Council.

Several colored maids have lost their jobs for refusing to ride the buses. But in spite of these economic pressures colored citizens still refuse to be coerced into riding city buses.

THE REV. C. K. Steele, president of the ICC, made trips to Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Newark for public relations talks on behalf of the Tallahassee bus protest.

He was also guest speaker at a NAACP Conference in Baltimore, Md., and the state NAACP Conference in Tampa, Florida.

In spite of the fact that a week has passed since the car pool of the ICC has been outlawed, colored citizens of Tallhaassee have persistently avoided riding the buses.

The ICC had to advise the people to make their own arrangements for getting to and from work. It seems as if all have taken the advice, because very few persons are seen walking and only a scattered few are seen on the busses.

TROUBLE IN TAMPA

Negro Ministers Protest Jailing of NAACP Official

Fri. 10-5-56 Montgomery, Ala.

TAMPA, Fla. (AP)—Negro ministers, protesting the forcible arrest of an official of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, called a public meeting tonight "to tell the truth about certain events in Tampa."

The Tampa Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance said it considered the events in question "illegal and against good morals."

A five-man delegation of the Alliance told Sheriff Ed Blackburn that Tampa's Negro citizens were "upset, up-stirred and organizing" because of reported circumstances of the arrest Monday of William A. Fordham, 36, president of the Florida branch of the NAACP.

Fordham was placed in handcuffs in a patrol car when arrested on charges of double parking and resisting arrest. He said he was kicked and beaten when he objected to driving his own car from the scene. Arresting officers said they used only enough force to get handcuffs on Fordham and put him in the patrol car.

Blackburn told the delegation he had investigated the incident and believed the officers were fully justified.

Boycott Leaders Still Targets Of Intimidation

Kansas City Mo.

Fri. 10-12-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — A warrant for the arrest of Dr. M. C. Wiliams, executive secretary of the Intercivic Council was issued October 3 by Magistrate John A. Rudd, municipal court judge. Rev. C. K. Steele, Council president, was arrested at the Bethel AME church, the same day.

Both Dr. Williams and Rev. Steele were charged with "unlawfully carrying on the business of operating motor vehicles for the transportation of passengers for hire without first obtaining a license from the city to do so."

In an earlier action, September 26, Dr. Williams was summoned to appear before Judge Rudd and to bring with him the minutes of meetings of the executive committee of the Council, minutes of the meetings of the Transportation committee, together with any and all books, records and papers in relation to furnishing transportation to persons in Tallahassee.

Twenty-one members of the Intercivic council were named as participants in the five-month old car pool used to transport Negroes in protest of segregated buses. Besides Rev. Steele and Dr. Williams the council members are K. D. Duport, J. Metz Rollins Jr., Dan D. Speed, Elbert W. Jones, James Hudson, Eddie Barrington Jr. David H. Brooks, Ralph Gilmore Coleman, Bessie L. Irons, Edward Daryl Irons, Office Burns, Isiah Platt, Henry T. Smith, Riley Hayward, Mathew Adams, John Cook Elizos F. Jones Jr., Robert Paul McGhee and Parker Hollis.

Miami Women Attack Bus Segregation

Call P. 1 Fri. 10-19-56

MIAMI.— (INS) — Four Negro women have filed suit in Miami federal court seeking to have city and state bus segregation laws declared unconstitutional.

Attorney G. E. Graves Jr., representing the four petitioners, asked Saturday that the court render its decision on the merits of the case, rather than by actual trial.

He said any remedy other than a directed verdict would "involve a multiplicity of suits and would cause further injury, damage and inconvenience to the plaintiffs . . ."

The suit was filed in behalf of Eleanor M. Fair, Maggie Garmon, Gloria Matthews and Alice Jackson. Miss Fair said she was arrested July 8 for refusing to move to the rear of a bus and the other three stated they had been forced to take seats in the rear of public transportation vehicles.

Named as defendants in the action were the Miami Transit Co., the city of Miami and individual city commissioners.

Probe Of Bus Protest Group, NAACP Sought

Atlanta Ga. Thurs. 10-11-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (INS) — The Tallahassee City Commission in effect, asked a legislative committee Wednesday to investigate the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and also the Negro Inter-Civic Council.

The commissioners sent a letter to the special investigative committee — set up by the legislature for the apparent purpose of investigating NAACP and the Ku Klux Klan — asking that the group look into all organizations in Tallahassee "which constitute violation of the laws of Florida."

The city commission has been engaged in a running battle with the NAACP and the Inter-Civic Council over the bus boycott called by Negroes in protest to segregated seating.

Meanwhile, City Judge John Rudd denied a motion today to throw out charges brought against Negro car pool drivers and council officers for illegally operating a transportation system.

Rudd said he has studied the briefs submitted by Negro attorneys and could not connect the cases and arguments cited with those being tried in city court.

Rudd inferred attorneys for the defendants were trying to inject the broad issue of segregation into the case and declared that "integration and segregation have nothing to do with it."

He said when the case go trial Oct. 17 he intends to restrict arguments to whether or not the car pools were legal.

Special City Attorney Mark Hawes said the motions filed for the defendants had no legal basis, in his opinion, and delcared it looked as if the defendants were using the court "almost as a soap box for NAACP propaganda."

Bystander Thurs. 10-11-56 Des Moines, Iowa P. 1

Tampa, Fla.—Police harrassment of NAACP leaders, now assuming a southwide pattern, has victimized liam A. Fordham, president of the Florida State Conference of NAACP Branches, who was arrested, handcuffed and beaten by police here this week on a charge of double parking.

Mr. Fordham, an attorney, double-parked his car in front of the local NAACP office to make a telephone call on October 1. While he was inside the office, police proceeded to call a wrecker to remove his car.

Capable of Driving

The difficulty, Mr. Fordham said in a statement the next day, "stemmed from the fact I insisted on being given a ticket and allowed to drive my own car instead of paying a wrecker $5.00 to pull it away. It seems to me that this policy of having drivers is a racket. I had not been drinking and felt that I was capable of driving my own car."

When he protested, he was "handcuffed, beaten, kicked and arrested by Officers W. L. Strickland and Zeon Henderson," Mr. Fordham said.

Actions Uncalled For

Backing up their president, the officers and members of the Florida State NAACP issued a statement affirming their support of Mr. Fordham "since our investigation reveals that actions of the officers were uncalled for and that they exceeded all lawful propriety."

Mr. Fordham also alleged that an account of his arrest in a local daily paper was "distorted," representing only what the police told the reporter. "I do not know of any attempt made by the local press to contact me or any officer of the NAACP to obtain facts," he said. "Nor did my wife, who was at home and who knew of my whereabouts at all times, receive any call from the press concerning the occurrance. The entire incident as related to reporters by the officers was distorted and the whole truth was not told." Bystander

Similar incidents involving NAACP leaders have been reported from Mississippi, Alabama and Texas. Negroes active in the civil rights movement have been arrested and fined for minor traffic violations.

Negroes Drop Car Pool in Bus Boycott

Post and Times Herald P. 2

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. Oct. 22 (AP)—The Negro Inter Civic Council today said it had abandoned the car pool it has sponsored to provide transportation for Negroes boycotting buses in protest against segregated seating.

However, the Rev. C. M. Steele, president of the Council and head of the Tallahassee chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said: "The war is not over. We are still walking." Tues. 10-23-56

Dan Speed, chairman of the Council's transportation committee, said, "We not only are not offering transportation, but we are not even offering advice."

The Council voted to drop its sponsorship of the car pool at a mass meeting of the boycotters last night. The action followed Saturday's conviction in City Court of the Council and 21 of its officers and members on charges of operating an illegal transportation system. The Council has indicated the verdict will be appealed.

City Judge John Rudd sentenced each of the defendants to pay a fine of $500 or serve 60 days in jail. He sentenced each to 60 days in jail, but suspended the jail term and put each on probation for one year.

Arrest 22, grab books of drivers

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 10-13-56

(Special to the AFRO)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Striving desperately to break the four-month old boycott of segregated buses here by colored citizens, city officials, by weekend, had extended to 22 the number of leaders charged with violating local ordinances in operating a car pool.

Ten of the accused were arrested Wednesday, while 12 others were served city court summonses Thursday, signed by Municipal Judge John A. Rudd. Hearing on the charges is set for Oct. 17.

Earlier, the city had arrested the 12 persons, including the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter-Civic Council which is spearheading the boycott on charges of violating the state "for-hire" law.

THE EARLIER charges against the 12 were dropped this week and much broader charges incorporating various transportation ordinances of the City of Tallahassee have been substituted.

The entire leadership of the Inter-Civic Council faces charges, in addition to six operators of service stations which have been supplying the car pool, and a number of drivers of the pool.

The Rev. K. S. DuPont, ICC vice president; Dr. M. C. Williams, executive secretary; Eddie L. Barrington, assistant secretary; the Rev. J. Metz Rollins, treasurer; Dr. James Hudson, chaplain; Dan B. Speed, director of the car pool; E. W. Jones, assistant car pool director; and the Rev. D. H. Brooks, chairman of ministers.

The six service station or garage operators who have been ordered to bring into court any records relating to business that had been done with the ICC are Thomas Hadley, Cornelius Speed, Adam Somer, Primious Harris, John Payne and Shack Gardner.

The arrests were based on warrants signed by Det. Sgt. R. J. Strickland, who has been conducting the city's investigation of the car pool cases.

The warrants charged the Rev. Mr. Steele and others with operating cars for hire within the city without obtaining a license from the city.

The original warrant stipulating that a state "for-hire" law was violated was dropped when defense attorney Theries Lindsay pointed out that Municipal Court had no jurisdiction in administering a state law and requested a transfer of the case to a state court.

Sergeant Strickland gleaned most of the information to base his arrests from the records of the ICC, which were subpoenaed forthwith on Sept. 26 by Judge Rudd.

Afro-American

THE JUDGE ordered Dr. Williams to bring to court "the minutes of the meetings of the executive committee of ICC, the minutes of the meetings of the transportation committee, together with all the council's books, records and papers dealing with and reflecting certain activities and transactions of the council in relation to furnishing transportation to any and all persons in the City of Tallahassee."

In addition to City Attorney Edward Hill, the records were checked by Mark R. Hawes, Tampa, Fla., attorney, who had been hired at a $4,000 fee by city commissioners to prosecute the boycotters.

Sat. 10-13-56

The case is regarded by the city as "significant" in that it may decide whether any private group in any city can operate a transportation system without control of governmental agencies.

(In Mongomery, Ala., the first successful anti-jim crow bus boycott launched by colored people is now in its 10th month).

ICC OFFICERS took two bundles of records to court Thursday, but Hawes, after examining them, said he felt the records were incomplete.

With the exception of a bank book and blank cards, no new records were produced by the Rev. Mr. Steele, who was requested to go back to the council office and "conduct a diligent search" for additional records while the hearing was under way.

Dr. Williams testified he had no knowledge of additional records and added:

"After an interim legislative committee was appointed to investigate the NAACP, it did not matter to me personally whether the records were in order or not."

JUDGE RUDD asked Dr. Williams:

"Do I understand that after you became aware of the legislative committee's purpose, you felt it would be best to cease keeping the records or destroy them?"

"That was my personal feeling," Dr. Williams replied.

"In order words, you didn't want to get involved in the investigation?" Rudd asked.

"Yes. I'm sorry I'm so involved today," said Dr. Williams.

Dan Speed, transportation chairman, said he had no records of cars or drivers.

Questioned about three cards found in the original records, he said they had been drawn up to get information about where the riders worked, the time they needed rides and other pertinent information.

He said he discarded the idea after finding out it wouldn't work and no such records were ever kept.

The Rev. Mr. Rollins, treasurer, said he had no detailed records showing who contributed to the council and what amounts. He was asked to bring in this month's cancelled checks.

Both the Rev. DuPont, vice president, and Mr. Barrington, one of the original signers of the ICC's charter, testified they had no additional records.

EARLIER IN the week, Circuit Court Judge Hugh Taylor denied a petition filed by Mr. Lindsay in behalf of the boycotters asking that the trial be prohibited.

The Oct. 17 mass trial will mark the climax of efforts on the part of the city to end the protest movement sparked May 28 when two Florida A and M University coeds were arrested for sitting in the "white" section in a crowded bus.

First students at FAMU boycotted the buses, then the Ministerial Alliance joined the boycott and within a week the boycott was almost 100 per cent effective.

The bus company, which derived most of its income from colored riders, was forced to suspend operation in July because of the loss of funds.

It resumed operation in August, after the Junior Chamber of Commerce launched a "ride the buses" drive, to get more white patronage for the company, but colored citizens maintained the boycott, despite the fact that the bus company hired two colored drivers for routes through colored neighborhoods.

38-b

DRIVERS IN the car pool of more than 60 vehicles have been subject to police harassment since the boycott began, being arrested and heavily fined for trifling and, in some instances, "trumped up" traffic violations.

The harassment has even extened to drivers of out-of-state cars, who have complained to the ICC that they have been rudely treated by Tallahassee policemen.

The Rev. Mr. Steele said this week that he is considering appealing to President Eisenhower and the FBI for an investigation of civil rights violations during the boycott.

He had previously called upon Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida to investigate the "various types of prosecutions by city police," but Collins rejected his request with the remark that "the courts were the forum for relief of alleged proscriptions.

Police Chief Frank Stoutamire admitted that several colored persons had been brought to headquarters and questioned about car pool cases, but denied that there had been any intimidation.

THE ICC has never swerved from its original three demands of the bus company: (1) Service on the buses on a "first-come, first served" basis on the matter of seating; (2) hiring of colored drivers on routes through predominately colored neighborhods; (3) courtesy by bus operators to patrons,

When the company made its concession to hire two colored drivers upon restoring its service, it expected colored citizens to flock back upon the buses.

This did not happen after the Rev. Mr. Steele counseled a mass meeting that the company could not buy the principle for which the boycott was launched (seating without segregation) with a couple of jobs to colored drivers.

BROOKLYN (ANP) — A mass meeting for the benefit of the Tallahassee, Fla., bus boycotters will be held Monday, Oct. 22, at the Mt. Olive Baptist Church in Brooklyn.

Daphne Sheppard, newspaperwoman and vice president of the Brooklyn Chaper of the Business and Professional Women's Club, will be the principal speaker. The NAACP and ten church choirs will assist.

More than 20 arrests have been made of members of the Inter-Civic Association, which has been operating a car pool in Tallahassee since last May and refusing to accept jim crow bus service.

'Court The Forum'

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.— "The court is the forum" for dissolving problems arising among the citizenry, Gov. Leroy Collins informed the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter-Civic Council Friday, in answer to an appeal from the latter for an investigation of police harassment of colored motor vehicle operators.

Friday's telegram was not the first that the Rev. Mr. Steele has sent Governor Collins protesting the pressures exerted on minority group citizens operating a car pool here to keep from riding on the segregated buses.

Previous telegrams have gone unanswered.

In another legal move, during the week, Theries Lindsay, ICC attorney, asked Circuit Judge Hugh Taylor to subpoena bus boycotter prosecution records, so that the defendant car pool members who face trial Thursday, Oct. 4, may be better able to answer charges against them.

THE ELEVEN, included among whom are Dan Speed, grocer and director of the car pool and the Rev. K. S. Dupont, ICC vice president, stand arraigned of violating a state law in transporting citizens without a special license to do so.

Crackdown On Fla. Bus Boycotters

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — Florida's capital city of Tallahassee began its long-threatened crackdown on Negro car pool operators Wednesday in an attempt to break the back of a bus boycott sparked by segregated seating.

Several drivers were hauled into police headquarters and booked for failing to have "for hire" tags on their vehicles. The attorney general recently ruled autos being used in the car pool fell into the "for hire" classification.

Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter Civic Council, which is sponsoring the boycott, denounced the arrests as "very unfair."

He declared: "Instead of forcing us back on the buses, it will have the opposite effect and make us more determined than ever to continue our efforts for equal treatment . . ."

The average cost per car for the special tags would be about $15 but the city commission has the right to limit the issue of such plates.

Among those arrested was the Rev. K. S. Dupont, vice president of the Inter Civic Council.

In Miami, meanwhile, a 31-year-old Negro woman accused of disorderly conduct by refusing to move to the rear of a bus was found not guilty.

The judge, pointing out there was only one other passenger on the vehicle, commented: "I don't see how the peace can be breached with only one other person knowing it."

Bus Boycott Leaders Face Trial Oct. 17

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Oct. 4 (UP)—The city today arrested the entire executive committee of the Negro Inter Civic Council on charges of illegally operating a transportation system for Negroes boycotting local buses.

The charges were placed against 22 Negroes and the Council as a whole. Trial of the cases was set for Oct. 17.

Earlier, the city had arrested 10 individuals, including Council President C. K. Steele, who also is local head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on individual charges of operating motor vehicles for hire without obtaining a State license.

These cases had been scheduled for trial this morning after two earlier postponements. The city unexpectedly dropped the charges today and filed the broader charges against the Council and 22 of its executive board and members.

The broader charges are based on various transportation ordinances of the city of Tallahassee rather than the State "for hire" law. The Council had contended the city had no jurisdiction over state "for hire" laws.

The arrests arose out of a boycott in a dispute over segregated seating that began May 28. Cities Transit Co. was forced out of business in July by the boycott but resumed operations Aug. 2 on new routes.

MISS YVONNE E. HAYLING
Coed supports bus boycott

'Little folk' who rode buses still walking

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Charles Carter, the manager of the Tallahassee Bus Company, admitted here last week that the boycott of the city buses was still very effective.

The boycott began on May 29 when two FAMU coeds were arrested for failing to move to the rear of a bus when ordered to do so by the operator.

The boycott forced the company out of business July 1, but it returned its coaches to the streets Aug. 1, after a "ride-the-bus" campaign gained additional white patrons. The campaign was sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

TWO COLORED drivers were hired on buses that run in colored sections, but this concession to the boycotters did not appreciably affect the company's business.

The slogan adopted by the boycotters is "first-come, first served" in the matter of seating, and this plan would do away with segregation altogether.

THE PEOPLE upon whom the success of the boycott rests, the domestics, students and others who rode the bus, are still walking.

"I'm not going to ride until they come to an agreement and I will continue to walk as long as the boycott goes on.

"I don't mind walking, "says Mrs. Maggie Nicholson, a maid, who works on the Thomasville highway, a six-mile walk twice a day.

Mrs. Janie Willians, also a maid, declared, "I am along with my people. As long as they walk, I walk."

I. T. Platt said: "From what I can learn from the people they feel they will walk right on. They are going to go until things are thoroughly changed..

How much in bank?

By ELIZABETH M. OLIVER

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—"How much money do you have in the bank?"

This is one of seven questions asked bus boycotters apprehended by city police this week.

Other questions, according to Theries Lindsay, attorney for the Inter Civic Council, directing the five-month boycott of jim crow city bus lines, were:

"Who are the New York lawyers that are going to come in and help defend the for hire cases?

"How many cars does the Inter Civic Council own?

"HOW MUCH DO YOU PAY the drivers?

"How much money do you collect at your meetings?

"From whom do you buy your gas?"

"How much do you pay for your gas?

MR. LINDSAY SAID the police department is using a new investigator to seize council leaders without warrants and to grill them at length on council activities.

Two women riding in a car pool vehicle were detained Monday. Police and the city attorney's office told an AFRO reporter no women were detained.

Dr. M. C. Williams said, "I went to the police station. They were there all right."

Others taken in custody were Dan B. Speed, coordinator for the council, and the Rev. King S. Dupont, vice president.

Police told these officials that they had compiled a list of all the people who would be questioned.

"SOME OF THESE OFFICIALS are scheduled to be tried in Municipal Court Oct. 4 on the flimsy charge of operating "for hire vehicles." The for hire charge comes about because they were using their own automobiles to give rides to their friends and neighbors during the protest against riding segregated buses.

QUESTIONING POLICE also had photostatic copies of the Inter Civic Council's charter, granted by the State of Florida as a non profit organization, which is organized for the civic improvement of its members and others.

Mr. Lindsay said:

"The Gestapo methods used by the Tallahassee Police Department is merely another technique designed to keep colored people down and prevent them from seeking the things that rightfully belong to them as American citizens."

4 sue for integration

MIAMI, Fla. (ANP) — G. E. Graves, attorney, last week filed suit in Federal court here on behalf of four women who are seeking to have the city and state segregation laws declared unconstitutional.

The suit, aimed specifically at the bus segregation laws and practices in Miami, was filed on behalf of Mesdames Eleanor M. Fair, Maggie Garmon, Gloria Matthews and Alice Jackson.

IN THEIR petition, the women charge that the bus segregation laws deny them their constitutional rights and asserts the laws are based solely on racial orgin.

The petition further states that the bus segregation laws deny them (colored Amricans) "equal protection of the law guaranteed everyone."

MRS. FAIR said she was sent to city jail last July 8 after refusing orders of the bus driver and a policeman that she move to a rear seat.

Tallahassee trial sidelights

Afro-American P.18
Baltimore Md.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Mark R. Hawes, Tampa attornty, who was hired by the city at the expense of $4,000 to prosecute Tallahassee bus boycott leaders, was repeatedly upbraided by Attorney Whittaker and appeared afraid of the man, whose actions caused him to stutter, and continually make errors.

Sat. 10-27-56

At one time he submitted the wrong batch of ICC checks to Godfrey Smith to be identified.

He said, while the courtroom tittered, "I'm afraid I had you identify the wrong batch of checks, Mr. Smith."

Mr. Smith, who had been permitted to leave the witness stand, was on his way back to the bank and had to be recalled. The court took a "five minute" recess which lasted 20 minutes.

Indication that he habitually does so during his court trials was in the grease spot on the map where his head rubbed.

The ancient courthouse showed signs of age and unkept condition. Cigaret butts, refuse, burnt matches literally covered the floor of the second floor courtroom. Cobwebbs hung in the corners of the ceiling.

Behind the "bench," which is a serious of delapidated tables, were calendars advertising various auto firms. Paint peeled from the sidewalls. The seats consisted of hard church-type benches and folding chairs.

Judge Rudd rubbed his recently greased hair repeatedly and objected to the ICC plans for prayer before the opening session.

In almost 90 degree heat, young and old were present. Household help, farmers, students, people who were there to see what the end would be.

ON THE WHOLE, the crowd came some poorly clad, others richly dressed.

White spectators were entirely men, in shirt sleeves or tee shirts, shabby hair, unshaven. They sat with mouths open, listening, trying to understand.

The concensus is that the whites are "not too interested."

Rodriques and Theries Lindsay were outstanding both in appearance and in proper presentation in contrast to Whittaker and Hawes, who presented an air of informality and uncertainty.

The latter two in a "palsy-walsy" attitude with the judge, requesting innumerable "5-minute" recesses, turned the courtroom for solemnity to "picnic time," causing frequent laughter.

THE APPEARANCES of Hawes and Whittaker, who is a fabulous criminal lawyer, caused this remark from Rodriques: "This is a misdemeanor which has been elevated to the proportions of a major crime."

Theries Lindsay brought a large tape recorder in with him. It looked like a portable phonograph. He set it up on the table in front of him and operated it throughout the trial.

The judge and Hawes halted testimony while Lindsay changed the tape holders. Lindsay recorded the entire proceedings.

ANY REMARK which tended to defer the defendants was immediately overruled.

Rodriques objected to everything methodically. He got so that he said: "Same objection as before."

Judge Rudd, forgetting how the previous objection was stated, said: "Repeat your objection, restate it, I forget what it was."

When Rodriques rose to state the objection, the courtroom giggled.

That Hawes had put out some of the $4.000 used to hire him was evident in his expensive dark blue suit and his spotless white shirt, his fresh hair cut, his shining black shoes.

A hefty, neat young man, he was obviously disturbed by Whittaker's brow-beating before the court.

Men Operating "Car Pool" Given Heavy Fines

P. 1

Special To Journal and Guide

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Fines totaling $11,000 were assessed against 21 individuals and against the Inter-Civic council here last week when a City Court judge found the defendents and the organization guilty of illegally providing transportation for colored citizens boycotting local buses.

Despite the "guilty" verdict local residents have announced themselves unwilling to yield to segregation on buses and in noting appeals of the court ruling foresaw a long, legal battle. In the meantime, the main theme along Tallahassee streets is "walk on" with last weekend's verdict hampering, rather than helping, efforts to get colored citizens to accept discriminatory seating arrangements.

Judge John Rudd imposed $500 fines and suspended sentences of 60 days against the defendants including the entire executive committee of the council.

EACH DEFENDANT was also placed on probation for a year.

The verdict was "guilty" despite the fact that defense counsel pointed out that the transportation provided for boycott supporters was not paid for by the passengers. The cost of providing the transportation is actually met by contributions to the council, Attorney Francisco Rodriguez pointed out.

NOTICE OF appeal was given and if the appeal is not perfected, the defendants must pay the fines or go to jail for sixty days.

A stipulation of the judgment was that an additional 60-day sentence can be imposed if they violate terms of their probations, which require them "not to participate in illegal activity" for a year.

THE DEFENDENTS in the case were accused of failing to provided "for hire" licenss for cars used in the highly successful "car pool" which has provided transportation for local colored residents since early last spring when a boycott was begun after two coeds at Florida A. and M. University here were arrested for refusing to give their seats on a bus to white patrons.

The Inter Civic council asked the city administartion to bar segregated seating on buses, but the city refused to do so. Bus firm operators sought to appease the colored citizenry by abolishing seating jimcorw but was denied the right to do so by the city.

Later, the company added two colored drivers on predominantly-colored routes, but this failed to attract colored patronage to the line which had a 70 per cent colored clientele before the boycott was instituted.

Boycotters Fined $500

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS)— The Tallahassee Inter-Civic Council and 21 individual defendants were found guilty Saturday of illegally operating a car pool for Negroes boycotting city buses.

The boycott, which forced suspension of bus service in Florida's capital city for several weeks last spring, was called in protest over segregated seating.

City Judge John Rudd sentenced each defendant to a $500 fine or 60 days in jail. He also handed each a mandatory 60 day term, but suspended this judgement and ordered a year's probation for each instead.

Execution of the sentences was delayed pending a motion for a new trial, which defense attorneys said will be filed.

Sat. 10-27-56

The jurist, handling the cases without a jury, delayed only 15 minutes after testimony was completed before announcing the verdict. He said he asked for "divine guidance" in arriving at a fair pronouncement.

The 21 car pool drivers, including the entire nine-man executive committee of the Inter Civic Council, were arrested for operating their vehicles without "for hire" tags.

The trial opened last Wednesday and dragged over three and a half days with the prosecution calling some 30 witnesses to the stand to prove that the car pool was a commercial operation functioning without a franchise.

P. 5

"It is a waste of the taxpayers money. A witch-hunt and reflection on the good name of the U.S.A.

"The city of Tallahassee plainly has no case and should withdraw its charges in the interest of what the American Government stands for.

"I will pray for such a misled city and the Universal Church should pray for the city officials who are doing more to help the Communists than they are doing to hurt the defendants.

"Wrong can never win and, whether in Tallahassee or in Washington, will never prevail.

He was accompanied by the Revs. A. L. Bennett, presiding elder Quincy District; Walter S. White, presiding elder of the Tallahassee District; H. McNeal of Bethel Baptist Church, Tallahassee; Mr. John H. Cobb and Mr. Louis Stokes.

He said: "Tell Carl Murphy I am on the firing line. We are behind the boycott one hundred thousand strong."

He was greeted at the courtroom door by more than 150 spectators, who made him welcome by their handshakes. The defendants expressed gratitude at his presence.

New Tallahassee Buses To Spurn Negro Riders

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The Tallahassee bus company announced last week that it will resume operations "fairly soon" with routes aimed at providing transportation for white passengers only.

The company had been forced out of business July 1 by a boycott of buses by Negroes.

The move came today after the Tallahassee Chamber of Commerce assured the transit company a "ride the bus" campaign by white citizens would keep the line out of financial trouble.

The Chamber of Commerce, headed by Tom Brownlee, is passing out forms on which white citizens of Tallahassee can list what schedules they prefer and what routes they wish the buses to operate along.

The bus company — Cities Transit, Inc., — said the routes would be "steered away" from Negro sections of the city because the Negroes, who have refused to end their boycott, "wouldn't ride anyway."

The boycott had forced the bus company to discontinue operations as of July 1 because of financial difficulties brought about by the lack of Negro passengers. Negroes had made up 70 per cent of the passenger load on the vehicles.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 17 (AP) — The City Commission today ordered a police crackdown on drivers of automobiles in the car pool which has provided transportation for Negroes since they started boycotting public buses May 28.

Cities Transit Co. suspended all its bus service July 1 because of the boycott. Negro riders supplied about 70 per cent of the bus company's revenues.

The City Commission ordered Police Chief Frank Stoutamire to start arresting Negro car pool drivers for any violations of state law governing public carriers. City Atty. James Messer said most of the car pool drivers were breaking the law.

VIOLATIONS CITED

Messer said car pool automobiles were not carrying the proper tag, since they are not licensed as public carriers, and that few of the drivers are licensed as chauffeurs.

He said although the passengers are not charged regular fares, the car pool is supported by contributions from passengers and in his opinion is governed by laws covering "for hire" vehicles.

Police have been investigating the car pool for the past two weeks and have completed a list of automobiles, drivers, pick up points, destinations and passengers, Messer said.

NEW SERVICE SET

The Commission asked the police chief to turn over the information to City Prosecutor Edward Hill for background information to be used in making future cases against car pool drivers.

Manager Tom Brownlee of the Tallahssee Chamber of Commerce conferred with state agency department heads on restoration of bus service. Cities Transit has agreed to resume service with routes and schedules geared to convenience of white patrons. Buses are expected to be back on the streets in about 10 days.

Brownlee hopes to obtain agreement from state agencies to stagger working hours to assist the bus line in providing better service.

Boycott Foe Declares War On Car Pools

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 19 (AP) —A legislator announced today an effort would be made to pass a bill at the special session of the Florida legislature next week to curb "wildcat carpooling" formed during transportation boycotts.

Rep. Kenneth Ballinger said the proposal he and a group of lawmakers would propose was inspired by the Negro boycott of Tallahassee buses which has resulted in a bus shutdown.

The boycott was called May 28 in a protest of segregated seating arrangements.

RESUME OPERATIONS

Ballinger's announcement came as the Cities Transit Co., reported it would start buses rolling again Aug. 2 over new routes geared to serve white patrons.

A slightly smaller type bus is being purchased for the new operations. Many of the older buses were sold after the July 1 shutdown. The Chamber of Commerce is sponsoring a ride the bus campaign to help make transit operations profitable when service is resumed.

Another legislator, Rep. James M. Beck, said he will introduce a bill to make it unlawful for a state employe to take part in an organized boycott. Some members of Florida A&M University here are leaders of the Negro Inter Civic Council which is active in the boycott.

The proposals would require organizations seeking to divert patronage from existing public transport systems by providing free transportation to be licensed by the state railroad commission or the city. Jail terms of up to 90 days plus fines of up to $250 would be provided in cases of violations.

"The bill as now drawn is designed to help other cities protect themselves against the planned and blatant ignoring of regulatory authority which has featured the leadership of the bus boycott in Tallahassee," Ballinger said.

Leaders of the Negro Inter Civic Council could not be contacted immediately for comment regarding Ballinger's statement.

The city commission has ordered a crackdown on Negro car pool operators it says are violating state "for hire" licensing regulations, but the police department delayed start of the crackdown another day to enable police to develop sufficient evidence to make arrests.

The commission said it had been advised by the city attorney that automobiles used in carpools should have "for hire" tags and drivers should have chauffeurs' licenses.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—The president of the Negro Inter Civic Council said this week he regrets a news release sent out in the name of the council critical of President George W. Gore, jr., of Florida A and M university.

Rev. C. K. Steele said the release was put out by "well meaning, but overzealous" members of the organization.

Sat. 10-6-56

"'I consider it unfortunate that anyone should meddle in the private affairs of the university," he said. "The affairs of the university should be something completely apart from the bus dispute."

The news release issued in the name of the council claimed that Dr. Gore had issued what amounted to an ultimatum to the university staff and faculty not to participate in the bus boycott here.

Dr. Gore denied he had issued any such ultimatum, but said he had appealed to the faculty, staff and employes of the university to use discretion and refrain from active participation in the boycott.

Buses Stop Rolling!

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sat. 8-28-56 Sat. 8-7-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Florida's capital city is without public transportation this week because officials of the local bus concern have yet to knuckle under to Negro demands that "total integration" be instituted by the City Transit Company.

The bus system shut down its operations Saturday midnight because of the economic pressure brought to bear on it by a four-week-old boycott by Negro riders.

Tallahassee's Negro citizenry took the shutdown calmly for the Inter-Civic Council, which is spearheading the boycott, has promised "full transportation" and has swung a 74-car pool in action.

The council has demanded "total integration" and "courtesy" from white bus drivers toward Negroes. In addition, the organization has been pressing for the employment of Negro drivers on predominately Negro lines.

A last-minute attempt of city officials to avert the bus shutdown was squelched when the Inter-Civic Council turned down a "compromise" offer which offered to permit "open seating" on lines serving Negro districts, except for the "reservation" of a three-passenger seat in front for whites. The city had also offered to permit the hiring of Negro drivers.

STETSON COLEMAN, owner of the City Transit Company, called the boycott, "un-American." State Senator Wilson Carraway of Tallahassee cracked, the "Supreme Court decision cannot be enforced in Tallahassee without calling out the U. S. Army."

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the ICC, countered, "We had rather walk with dignity than ride with humiliation."

The population of Tallahassee is 40,000. Approximately 65 per cent of the bus company's trade is Negro.

The Rev. K. S. DuPont, vice president of the Negro Inter Civic Council which is sponsoring the boycott as a protest against segregated seating, said he believed the police crackdown on car pool operations is an attempt to force passengers back on the buses.

Police have arrested seven car pool drivers since Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin ruled that vehicles used to transport boycotters are providing public transportation and should carry "for hire" tags. Such tags cost about $15 more than the average car license plate.

All seven were charged with failing to have "for hire" tags. Their cases will come up in police court Monday. DuPont, who is one of the seven, said all will plead innocent.

DuPont said the auxiliary driver plan will be tried to prevent delays which have been caused when drivers have been taken to the police station for questioning.

The company agreed to restore service on a segregated basis, with new schedules and a number of new routes geared to serve white residents of the city, at the request of the Chamber of Commerce and other civic organizations which are conducting a "ride the bus" campaign.

Charles Carter, bus company manager, said it had been decided to restore service on the Florida A&M University and Frenchtown routes as well because of a "tremendous response" from residents of the two areas "who want service to resume."

Two petitions urging resumption of service were being circulated by Negro leaders and reportedly had more than 900 signers.

The bus company suspended service July 1 because of financial losses suffered after Negroes started the boycott May 28 in protest against segregated seating as required by state law. Few Negroes used the buses after the boycott went into effect.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Times are getting hard for Montgomery's white bus drivers, many of whom have taken a stand against the hiring of Negro drivers. The local city bus line has laid off 21 m re drivers and three other employes on a "temporary" basis.

This was the statement made by Miss Loyce Cargile, a white Florida school teacher, before some cheering 900 persons attending a mass meeting of the Inter-Civic Wednesday at Bethel Baptist Church here.

In congratulating the city's citizens for their initiative and efforts, in spite of harassment, to hasten integration, she vowed she would not ride a taxi or bus while the protest movement was in effect.

"TAKING AWAY the privileges of democracy leads us to another form of government," she said, adding, "when democracy is in danger for a segment of the population, it is in danger for all.

Miss Cargile criticized the twisting and turning of the old laws and the creation of new ones for the purpose of intimidating colored citizens. She compared some of the tactics used by the politicians in Florida with those employed by the defunct Facists abroad.

"Absolute power corrupts absolutely," she declared.

Boycott Flayed by Gov. Collins

Tallahassee Line Begins Sale of Buses

New Orleans, La.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 2 (AP)—Gov. Leroy Collins said Monday he regards the Negro bus boycott as a "miscarriage of ambition."

Times 7-3-56

His statement came after the Cities Transit Co., suspended the service made unprofitable by loss of Negro patronage and began selling off its buses. Five buses left Tallahassee Monday to be delivered to a purchaser in Cuba.

Between 1500 and 1700 white persons are having to make other arrangements for transportation. Apparently the are either walking or getting rides from neighbors because taxicab companies reported little or no increase in business.

"Efforts made here by the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) which have resulted in discontinuance of bus service in this community, I regard as a miscarriage of ambition," Collins said.

'Gains Nothing'

"If this organization is interested in advancing the welfare of our Negro citizens, it should concern itself with other conditions of far more importance than where people sit on buses.

"There are many areas for real and substantial improvement such as health standards, moral standards and educational standards, in which they could become engaged with a great deal more benefit to the people they represent."

Collins cited efforts made to improve conditions for Negroes in Tallahassee in recent years and declared "the tragedy of this bus situation is that it has gained nothing for the Negroes and much has been lost in the tensions and antagonisms which have been developed. . . .

"I frankly think that the Negroes had some just grievances about the operation of the bus service. But it is clear to me that the city authorities indicated in good faith a willingness to adjust these grievances."

Extension Threatened

Meanwhile, the Tallahassee Junior Chamber of Commerce talked over possible action to get the buses back in service but decided against taking definite steps until it is seen whether there are further developments.

Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter Civic Council which spearheaded the boycott, threatened at a mass meeting to extend the boycott to white merchants unless there's an end to what he described as "police intimidation" of Negroes.

Intimidation was denied by police chief Frank Stoutamire who said he hasn't seen any mistreatment and "wouldn't stand for it."

Negro leaders were working on plans for a jitney bus system to supplement the car pools which have been in operation since start of the boycott. The Negroes began staying off buses after two Negroes were arrested for taking seats in a white part of a bus and refusing to move.

The Negro community, about one-third of Tallahassee's 40,000 population, has refused to ride buses since May 29 in protest against segregation practices required by state and city law. An estimated 70 percent of the bus company's business came from Negroes.

Negro Bus Riders Offered Protection

Miami, Fla.

TALLAHASSEE —(UP)— The City Commission offered police protection Thursday to any Negroes who want to ride city buses on a segregated basis but hotly refused to negotiate further with a Negro group demanding full integration.

P-28-a

The commission, in a brief but militant meeting, slammed the door on any further negotiations with the Negro Inter-Civic Council. The council led a five-week boycott which forced the Cities Transit Bus Co. to close down July 1 because of a 60 per cent drop in revenue.

Council members vowed again Wednesday night to stay off the buses until segregated seating is outlawed and "true democracy finds expression in this southland of ours."

Bus service will be resumed "within five or six days" but the old routes which largely served the city's 15,750 Negroes will be revised to appeal to white patronage.

"The buses are going to be supported and run without the Negroes, but if they want to ride they are going to be protected," Commissioner Joe Cordell said. "We have enough white people who will support the buses, but if any Negroes want to ride we want them to be protected by the police and know they won't be molested by anybody."

The commission charged the Inter-Civic Council "intimidated" other Negroes into staying off the buses, and Mayor Fred Winterle said more police would be hired if necessary to protect Negro passengers.

The commissioners agreed unanimously they are "sick and tired of dealing with the Inter-Civic Council and charged most of its leadership came from newcomers to Tallahassee and professors and their wives at Florida A&M University for Negroes.

Winterle hinted the board of control, which governs the universities, may be asked to investigate and said "there will be no more negotiations with the Inter-Civic Council. We're fed up."

Crack Down Begins On Bus Protest Drivers

Daily Herald

Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 8-23-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — Florida's capital city of Tallahassee began its long-threatened crackdown on Negro car pool operators Wednesday in an attempt to break the back of a bus boycott sparked by segregated seating.

Several drivers were hauled into police headquarters and booked for failing to have "for hire" tags on their vehicles. The attorney general recently ruled autos being used in the car pool fell into the "for hire" classification.

Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter Civic Council, which is sponsoring the boycott, deriounced the arrest as "very unfair."

He declared: "Instead of forcing us back on the buses, it will have the opposite effect and make us more determined than ever to continue our efforts for equal treatment..."

The average cost per car for the special tags would be about $15, but the city commission has the right to limit the issue of such plates.

Among those arrested today was the Rev. K. S. Dupont, vice president of the Inter Civic Council.

In Miami, meanwhile, a 31-year-old Negro woman accused of disorderly conduct by refusing to move to the rear of a bus was found not guilty.

The judge, pointing out there was only one other passenger on the vehicle, commented: "I don't see how the peace can be breached with only one other person knowing it."

Say Drivers of Protest Cars Not Licensed Chauffeurs

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (ANP) — City officials are bending over backwards here to do as much as they can to make life as hard as possible for Tallahassee's Negroes who stopped riding Jim Crow buses more than six weeks ago.

Last week the City commission ordered Police Chief Friend Stoutmire to begin arresting drivers of the cars which have been providing transportation for Negroes since May 28, when Negroes began boycotting city buses in protest of biased seating.

The order came after City Attorney James Messer alleged that investigation had shown that most of the drivers in the pool were not licensed as chauffeurs and the cars were not bearing the proper license tags.

Passenger riding in the car pool are not charged fares, but Messer said that is his opinion that the cars are operating in the public carrier field since the pool is supported by contributions from passengers.

Messer said that the police have been investigating for the past two weeks and have compiled lists of cars, drivers, pick-up points, destinations and passengers.

This information was turned over to the city prosecutor as background information, apparently to be used when police begin arresting the drivers.

The Rev. K. S. DuPont, vice-president of the Inter-Civic council, meanwhile urged all drivers in the car pool "to be as thoughtful and careful as they can and to offer no resistance at all if questioned by police."

"We are asking all persons wherever they are," he said, "to join us in prayer, morning, midday, and afternoon, for a better Tallahassee."

Rev. DuPont said his organization would call a business meeting at which the police crackdown will be discussed.

"It's kind of shocking," he said, "but I guess we'll have to pass through it."

Plan Drive On Florida Car Pools

Chicago Ill.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — An intended crackdown by Tallahassee police against Negro car pool drivers in the boycott against city buses was delayed while police develop sufficient evidence to make arrests.

The city commission said it has evidence that the car pool drivers are violating state laws concerning vehicles which are for public hire.

Negroes have been using station wagons and other private vehicles for transportation since the boycott started as a protest against racial insults by bus drivers and segregated seating.

The company was forced to halt operations on July 1 because of the grave losses it suffered; however, an announcement was made last week that buses will start rolling again on Aug. 2.

The Cities Transit co. sold many of its buses after it went out of business, but has purchased a fleet of slightly smaller vehicles.

Meanwhile, the Inter-Civic Council, which is leading the boycott, issued an appeal for funds to provide a transportation system for Negro riders and to prepare for a "long legal battle."

Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the council, said the group plans to use 10 station wagons, full time drivers, a full time secretary and combination maintenance-d i s-patchers.

"We are profoundly positive that there is nothing wrong with our bus system that a good dose of decency, Christian love and real democracy will not cure," he said.

Tallahassee's Little War

Courier Sat. 9-15-56 P.9

Because the militant colored citizens of Tallahassee have refused to go along with the white city officials and disobey Federal Court rulings to desegregate local public buses, those sworn to obey the Constitution have declared war on the Negroes. Pittsburgh, Pa.

It is just a little war, and the city officials know that they are bound to lose in the long run, but they have never learned to bow gracefully to the inevitable.

So now they are warring against Negro leaders who are operating the car pool, have arrested two of them and released them in $100 bond each in an effort to terrorize the Negro citizens into again riding the jim-crow buses.

Apparently, Tallahassee's officials completely fail to understand the feeling of their colored citizens on this issue, not realizing that people who are willing to so inconvenience themselves as to boycott the usual means of transporation will not be so easily frightened into returning to their former humiliation.

We hope it will soon dawn upon the Tallahassee city fathers that a new Negro is abroad in the South today.

Boycotted Tallahassee Buses To Roll Soon on New Routes

Constitution P.2 Atlanta Ga.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 11 (AP)—City bus operations, halted because of a prolonged boycott by Negro riders, are going to be resumed by Cities Transit Co., the Chamber of Commerce said today.

Thomas Brownlee, secretary of the chamber, said the buses would start rolling as soon as revised routes can be worked out on the basis of a survey of requirements. The start probably will be made within two weeks.

Tallahassee has been without bus service since July 1. Service was suspended because the boycott made operations unprofitable, the transit firm said.

The boycott was called almost two months ago in a move by Tallahassee Negroes to gain integrated seating. The city commission has refused to approve full integration, saying this was prohibited by state laws.

TALLAHASSEE BUS PROTEST STILL "VERY EFFECTIVE," MGR. REPORTS

Bham Ala. Sat. 9-15-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The manager of the Tallahassee Bus Company declared Wednesday business is "picking up" but added the boycott of city buses by local Negroes is still "very effective."

Charles Carter declared that business "is still 40 per cent lower than at this time last year." The buses were boycotted May 29 in protest over the arrest of two co-eds from all-Negro Florida A & M College who refused to move to the rear of a segregated vehicle.

The company was forced out of business July 1 but returned its coaches to the streets Aug. 1 after a "Ride-The-Bus" campaign by the Chamber of Commerce gained additional white patrons.

Carter said the average daily passenger load is around 2,500. He said some 400 to 600 Negroes are included, "much less" than before the boycott.

Meanwhile, 10 Negro leaders of the movement will go on trial in Tallahassee next week on charges of operating car pools without proper licenses. Among them is Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter-Civic Council and the leader of the boycott.

Negro leaders cautious in Florida bus dispute

News
Thurs. 5-3-56 P. 7

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Negro leaders advised caution today in two Florida cities where there has been talk of bus boycotts similar to those at Montgomery, Ala., and Tallahassee, Fla. At Columbia, S.C., attorneys considered whether to appeal dismissal of a case involving segregation on city buses.

The Rev. Enoch D. Davis, leader of a Negro Citizens Cooperative Committee at St. Petersburg, Fla., requested a meeting with the city council to discuss equal seating of all races on city owned buses.

B'ham, Ala.

HE SAID yesterday the meeting is being sought to avert the possibility of a bus boycott similar to those at Montgomery and Tallahassee.

Council members asked Davis to draft a specific statement of what he wants to discuss. City Manager Ross E. Windom said St. Petersburg will enforce segregation on buses under state laws requiring Negroes to seat from the rear and white persons from the front.

At Miami, Fla., the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People issued a statement last night advising "all citizens to comply with existing city and state laws governing seating on buses."

THE MEETING followed the arrest of two Negroes during the week on charges of disorderly conduct for failing to move to the rear of buses. Before the meeting NAACP members said one of the arrests had the makings of a test case at law. There also was some speculation about a bus boycott.

Both the Montgomery and Tallahassee bus boycotts started after Negroes were arrested for refusing to move to the rear of buses. The Montgomery boycott has been in progress for more than six months and the Tallahassee boycott since May 28. Both have caused city bus systems to increase fares and cut services in efforts to meet operating costs.

AT COLUMBIA, S. C., attorneys for Mrs. Sarah Mae Flemming Brown studied an order dismissing her $25,000 damage suit against the South Carolina Electric and Gas Co. They have 30 days to file an appeal.

Timmerman ruled the company could not be made "liable in damages" for acting under "valid and subsisting" state segregation laws at the time.

Mrs. Brown charged her civil rights were violated in June, 1954, when a bus driver allegedly ordered her to vacate a front seat in a crowded bus and then struck her when she attempted to leave by a front entrance.

IT WAS TIMMERMAN'S second dismissal of the case. When it first came before him last year he ruled it did not state a cause of action. The Circuit Court of Appeals, however, reversed him and held that segregation on buses operating within the states is unconstitutional. The U. S. Supreme Court refused to review the case on appeal. This was interpreted later as meaning an appeal was premature.

At Atlanta, the Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia tightened entrance requirements following reports several Negroes planned to seek admission to the white Georgia state college of business administration.

One regulation would empower the president of any institution in the system to refer an application to the Board of Regents for assignment to another institution if the president feels "that the educational needs of any applicant . . . can best be met at some other institution."

The other would allow a third alumnus to sign an entrance application in lieu of a county ordinary or clerk of court in a county of more than 100,000 population. At present, applicant must obtain the signatures of two sponsoring alumni and the county ordinary or clerk of court.

Other developments included:

Baton Rouge, La.—The NAACP appealed a state court ruling outlawing the pro-integration group in Louisiana under a law originally aimed at the Ku Klux Klan.

Crystal Beach, Ont. — Three white and two Negro youths were fined in connection with Memorial Day rioting at the Crystal Beach amusement park. Charges against two other Negroes were dropped. All seven were ordered deported and were escorted out of the county by provincial police.

Kingstree, S. C.—Sheriff Buford Boyd ordered an investigation to determine who fired shots in a religious meeting being conducted for Negroes by the Catholic Order of Our Lady of Springbank Dominican Friary. Father Patrick Walsh, head of the order, said four white men fired four pistol shots during a showing of a Passion Play on film. No one was injured.

New Orleans—The pro-segregation Citizens Council of New Orleans called on the FBI to investigate un-American and subversive charges lodged against it by the commission of human rights of the Catholic Committee of the South, a group of laymen studying social structures in the Southeast.

Tallahassee Judge Fines 21 In Bus Boycott

Sun. 10-21-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Oct. 20. —(AP) — Twenty-one defendants and the Negro Inter-Civic Council were found guilty Saturday of illegally providing transportation for Negroes boycotting the city buses as a protest against segregated seating.

Memphis Press Scimitar

City Judge John Rudd fined each of the defendants $500 and imposed suspended 60-day jail sentences on them. Each was placed on probation for a year.

The sentences were stayed pending a defense motion for a new trial. The motion is expected to be filed next week.

The verdict was received quietly by the defendants and other Negroes who crowded the courtroom.

Defense attorney Francisco Rodriguez declared there was no showing passengers had paid drivers for transportation and those who made contributions to the Inter Civic Council never had specified they were paying for rides.

Unless there is a successful appeal, the defendants will either have to pay their fines or go to jail for 60 days. An additional 60-day jail sentence can be imposed if they violate terms of their probations which require them "not to participate in illegal activities" for a year.

NEGROES 70 PERCENT OF CITY FARES

Fri. 6-15-56

B'ham, Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The 17-day-old boycott of city buses by Tallahassee Negroes appeared to be gaining strength Wednesday despite the fact that fares were raised from 10 to 15 cents by the Transit Co. to offset the loss of revenue caused by the boycott.

Bus Company Vice president Charles L. Carter, In announcing the Hike in fares, said the system was doing so because of "our recent trouble" and "present financial situation."

"A LAST RESORT"

Carter said the increase was "a last resort" to remain in business. He said the bus company lost a considerable sum of money last year and had planned to ask for an increase in fares before the boycott began.

Prior to the boycott, Carter said Negroes made up at least "70 per cent of the company's business."

BOYCOTT STRONGER

The latest developments strengthened the boycott, according to officials of the Tallahassee Inter-Civic-Council, which is leading the Drive. Officials claimed the boycott is "about 95 per cent effective."

Meanwhile, no developments were announced after meetings between Attorneys for the city and the Inter-Civic Council. Council president Rev C. L. Steele left Tallahassee reportedly because he had received many insulting telephone calls regarding his part in the Fracas. However, he is expected to return for tonight's council meeting.

MAY 2:

The boycott began May 28 with the arrest of a pair of Negro co-eds from Florida A. & M College in suburban Tallahassee. The two girls were arrested when they refused to take a seat in the rear of a Bus after a white woman complained.

The city later dropped the charges against the two, but the boycott had already gained momentum.

Montgomery's bus boycott now has continued so long that it has ceased to be news except when something out of the ordinary occurs in connection therewith.

Montgomery, Ala.

Certainly such an occurrence was the announcement by one of the leaders of the Negro protest against bus segregation that he is quitting because other leaders are putting personal interests before the movement and because of "misappropriation" of boycott funds.

The charge of personal aggrandizement undoubtedly reflects a restiveness that some boycott leaders have been experiencing as certain of their mates have become "heroes" in rallies staged in Harlem and elsewhere with the likes of Eleanor Roosevelt lending their presence and their praise.

But that is the less serious charge.

It has been obvious, of course, that radicals all over the country have been pouring money into Montgomery in vast amounts.

The statements of the accusing, and resigning, leader gives some rather interesting details.

Even though the boycott is an unsavory, trouble-making thing, we think we know Montgomerians well enough to know that they would be aroused by any charge that their local Negroes were being defrauded, even in such a sorry cause as this.

The other leaders of the boycott are quoted extensively as to the "falseness" of the charges.

A grand jury investigation with a complete audit of the manner in which all funds have been received, disbursed and otherwise handled will prove who is lying and who is telling the truth.

21 Negroes Fined Over Bus Boycott

Miami, Fla.
Sun. 10-21-56

TALLAHASSEE —(UP)— City Judge John Rudd, calling on Divine Guidance, fined 21 Negroes $500 each and gave them suspended 60-day jail sentences Saturday for operating a car pool in a racial boycott of city buses.

"I have never called for Divine Guidance so much and so often," Rudd said in handing down the sentence at the close of a four-day trial. "I hope each of you will be Christian enough to abide by the law."

The Negroes, including the local NAACP president, the Rev. C. K. Steele, were convicted of running an illegal public transportation system without a city permit for a state "for hire" license.

The car pool was set up five months ago when Tallahassee's 15,000 Negroes launched a boycott of Cities Transit, Inc., to protest segregated seating.

Both the boycott and car pool are still operating, but Police Chief Frank Stoutamire did not comment on what effect the court ruling will have. Attorney Francisco Rodriguez, representing the defendants and the Negro Inter Civic Council, said he will file a motion for a new trial.

Rudd also imposed a 60-day jail sentence for those failing to pay the fine and a 60-day suspended sentence with one year's probation for all. But he stayed execution until the motion for a new trial is decided.

Two Negro Units Clash On Bus Drive Pressure

Boycott Rejected By League

Herald 1-9-C
Miami, Fla.
Thurs 6-14-56

By BERT COLLIER
Herald Staff Writer

Two Negro groups clashed Wednesday over the amount of pressure to be put behind the drive to end segregation on Miami buses.

Representatives of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People tried to take over a meeting of the Negro Citizens Service League, according to Sam Solomon, league president. The meeting was called to discuss the threat of a bus boycott.

Despite efforts of the NAACP to eject newsmen and arrive at a policy decision in private, the league's advisory board turned down the boycott weapon as a means to hasten integration.

"We repudiate, with all the power of emphasis at our command, all loose talk of threats of a bus boycott," the League said in a resolution.

"Our situation here, unlike that in Montgomery or Tallahassee, does not warrant putting our people who ride the buses to such inconvenience."

The league decided to "instruct our people to abide by the law of the State of Florida until such time as, by legal measures, the law has been abrogated or repealed."

"We go on record as favoring all legal measures which may be employed to implement the ruling of the Supreme Court," the resolution said.

"Having enjoyed fine relations with the white people here over the years, we now call upon them, and the bus officials to do everything within their power to restrain bus drivers from allowing racial incidents to occur on buses."

The NAACP filed in Federal Court Tuesday the first suit to compel admission of Negro children to white Florida schools.

The suit, filed in the name of parents of six children, is unlikely to come to a conclusion for many months. The defendant Dade County School Boars is expected to file motions for delay on grounds that its study of plans for school integration are not yet complete.

The question of segregation on the buses may be settled more quickly.

In the meeting of the Negro Citizens Service League, R. D. Freeman, vice president of Miami Transit, explained the company's position.

Segregated seating is required on buses by state law and city ordinances, Freeman said. Until they are changed, the company is bound by them.

Should they be changed, the company will comply, Freeman said.

Wednesday night about 50 leaders from the four NAACP branches in Dade County — Perrine, Homestead, Liberty City and Miami — held a 3½-hour meeting to decide policy regarding bus segregation here. The members issued this statement after the meeting:

"The Dade County Council of NAACP branches advises all citizens to comply with existing city and state laws governing seating on buses."

Two Negroes, a youth and a woman, have been arrested this week for violating the segregation ordinance.

Rudolph Reid, 19, of 2525 NW 67th St., will appear in Miami City Court at 8:30 a.m. today to face a charge of disturbing the peace.

A similar charge faces Mrs. Bessie Kerbo, 50, of 341 NW 10th St., at 8:30 a.m. Friday.

If either trial results in a conviction, an appeal will be taken on grounds that segregation on buses is now unconstitutional.

Negroes Nix On Bus Compromise

State Press Fri. 6-8-56

There were few Negroes riding buses this week as a boycott got underway last week, and so far is about 80 per cent effective.

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, this week offered the "cooperation and advice" of the Association's national headquarters to the leaders of the Tallahassee, Fla., protest "against the humiliating treatment of our people on the bus lines . . . as long as it is conducted in a peaceful, non-violent manner and by lawful means."

Mr. Wilkins' offer was made in a telegram to the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Tallahassee NAACP branch and chairman of the new Inter Civic Council, organized to direct the protest which was started on May 26 by the arrest of two Negro women who refused to get up and leave two seats in a local bus vacant for possible occupancy by white passengers.

Meanwhile, the Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the six-month-old bus protest in Montgomery, Ala., wired encouragement to the Tallahasse group.

The arrested women, Mrs. Carrie Patterson and Miss Wilmena Jakes, students at the all-Negro Florida A&M university, located here, have been released. The charges of "placing themselves in a position to create a riot" has been dropped. Meanwhile the 2,400 students and the townspeople decided not to ride the buses until their demands were met.

The demands, formulated at a mass meeting on May 29, are essentially the same as those advanced in Montgomery. The students and townspeople asked:

1. That all passengers be seated on a first come first served basis;
2. That bus drivers be required to give fair and impartial treatment to Negro passengers; and
3. That Negro drivers be employed by the bus company.

City and bus company officials withheld action on the three-point demand until they can get a written statement. The demand was a verbal demand.

However, Charles Carter said he wanted to know exactly what is meant by first come, first serve demand. Carter is manager of the transit line. Negro leaders said that they want Negroes to be permitted to sit as long as there are vacant seats.

Carter said that had been the policy one buses serving Negro sections but that state racial segregation laws must be observed.

As the protest got underway, local police started a campaign to arrest for alleged traffic violations Negro motorists giving rides to other citizens. Among the first arrested were Mr. Steele and some members of the university faculty.

State Press

Following the arrest of the two students, the NAACP sent its Fla. field secretary, Robert W. Saunders to Tallahassee to make investigation of the situation. Mr. Saunders reported that trouble on the buses had been brewing for at least six weeks. Students and townspeople have been threatened and abused by some of the bus drivers. No one had been arrested, however, until May 26.

Mrs. Patterson and Miss Jakes, Mr. Saunders reported, are rated "above average students" who, according to faculty members and their fellow students, had never given any trouble.

Tallahassee, a capital of the state, has a population of about 40,000 people of whom 14,000 are Negroes. According to estimates, from 60 to 70 per cent of the bus passengers are Negroes. Negroes are required to sit from the rear forward, whites from the front rearward. If all seats are taken on a predominantly Negro line, colored passengers are required to get up and give their seats to white passengers as they board the bus.

About 1300 or 1400 Negroes who normally ride the buses are being transported in carpools, which were hurriedly organized last week.

City Offers Compromise

The city agreed to an earlier demand by the Boycott leaders for "first-come, first-served" seating without doing away with state and local laws requiring segregation.

The city also agreed that the bus company should accept applications for Negro drivers and should require drivers to be courteous to all passengers, regardless of color.

The Negroes at a mass meeting Monday nite rejected this compromise and chipped in with $700 to continue free pool cars to transport passengers.

The Negroes demand an end to the humiliating segregation on city buses, and nothing else will end the boycott.

Baltimore Md.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The bus boycott here by colored patrons, virtually 100 per cent effective, is killing the City Transit Company.

In full page newspaper advertisements Friday, the company said unless boycott relief is forthcoming by July 1, the firm will discontinue operation in Tallahassee.

Since the beginning of the boycott on May 28, it was reported the transit concern has been losing approximately $3,000 a day.

THE FIRST official confirmation of this report was made last Friday, when company officials admitted that at least 60 per cent of the revenue came from colored patrons.

(This figure is lower than the estimate given out by officials of the Intercity Civic Association, the organization which is sponsoring the boycott. Their estimate is that from 70 to 75 per cent of the revenue came from colored riders.)

EARLIER, CHARLES L. CARTER, general manager of the bus company, told the AFRO that unless the boycott was brought to an end, the company probably would have to discontinue operating here.

"We were losing money before this trouble started," he declared.

He added that about six months ago the owner of the company had talked of giving up the Tallahassee franchise.

"I talked the owner out of it," he said, "but if this boycott continues, we will be forced out of business."

At the same time, Mr. Carter stated that the company has three colored employees.

"THEY, TOO, are upset by this trouble and don't know if they are coming or going."

The gross as of Oct. 31 of that year was placed at $176,471.34.

HOWEVER THE mass meeting set for Wednesday night at Bethel AME Church was held. Approximately 300 persons attended, donating $297.51 to the car pool fund.

"We plan to follow through," he said. "No matter if our actions spell the end of bus transportation in Tallahassee. The colored people here are in no mood to underwrite segregation in public transportation."

THE BUS controversy dates from May 26 when a driver refused to refund two 10 cents fares to Misses Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie Patterson, 20, Florida A. and M. University students.

Max Coggins, driver, ordered the young women to give up their seats because they were sitting beside a white woman.

The students, both of Lakeland, Fla., answered that they would rather leave the bus than stand. Both asked that their fares be returned.

The driver, however, refused and they would not leave the seat. As a result both were arrested. Later they were released in $25 bail each in custody of university officials.

THE CHARGES against them were "placing themselves in a position to incite a riot."

The charges were dismissed on May 28. The same night a cross was burned in front of the house where the girls live off the campus.

Following a subsequent mass meeting of the student body, students refused to ride the buses. Later the boycott spread to the city at large.

Tallahassee Seeks Ruling On Free Buses

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Tues. 6-19-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 18 (AP)—The city asked a ruling today whether Negroes who are boycotting Tallahassee buses can legally operate their own bus without charging fares.

City Attorney James Messer said he was studying the law to see whether or not such an operation is legal.

Meantime, an estimated 500 Negroes attending a mass meeting went on record as expressing "sympathy" for the Cities Transit Co. in its current financial plight, but reaffirmed their stand to continue the boycott until Negroes win equal rights with white passengers on the buses.

The transit firm announced Friday it would be forced to go out of business July 1 unless a solution is found to its financial problems.

CAR POOL

The Negro community, representing about one-third of the city's 40,000 residents, has been boycotting city buses for three weeks in protest against segregated seating required by city and state law.

Dan Speed, who heads the Negro car pool committee, said his group had obtained a bus from St. Petersburg for use in providing free rides, but he said it had been put in the garage pending a check whether it could be legally used.

Speed said Leroy Thomas, the driver, was arrested Saturday for "obstructing traffic." When Thomas failed to appear in city court this morning, a warrant was issued for his arrest.

The bus was registered in the name of St. Peter's Missionary Baptist Church at Chaires when a license was obtained for it last week.

Negotiations toward a settlement of the boycott have bogged down and no solution is in sight.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Intercivic Council which is directing boycott activities, said at last night's mass meeting there was a discussion of the bus company's announcement it would suspend activities.

Tues. 6-19-56

"We are greatly disturbed about the plight of the bus company," he said. "We would be willing to do almost anything we could to make up for their losses short of giving up our request for open seating."

Steele repeated an earlier statement his group had no dispute with the bus company, but rather with city authorities over segregated seating arrangements.

"Oun position is that we would rather walk in dignity than ride in the midst of injustice and indignities," he said.

An estimated 70 per cent of the bus company's business prior to the boycott came from Negro riders.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 28 (AP)—Students at Florida A. & M. University for Negroes today appeared to be starting a boycott of city buses in protest against the arrest of two girl students.

The girls, Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were arrested Saturday after they refused to move to the rear of a city bus. They were charged with placing themselves in a position to cause a riot and released on $25 bond each pending a hearing in police court Friday.

Last night a small wooden cross was burned on the lawn of the house in which they were living and their landlady, Mrs. Eloise Kendrick, said they became frightened and moved into the college dormitory.

Students cheered and clapped their hands as an empty city bus was driven through the campus today. Earlier several hundred students staged a mass meeting and voted to stay off city buses for an indefinite period.

Broadus H. Hartley, president of the student body, said last Saturday's arrests were the latest "in a series of incidents in which we have been humiliated by bus drivers."

Negro Bus Rider Arrested; Refused To Move to Rear

Miami NAACP Youth Leader May Figure in Local 'Test Case'

By GEORGE SOUTHWORTH
Herald Staff Writer

A possible segregation "test case" had its beginning here Monday when a young Negro was arrested after he refused to move to the rear of a Miami Transit Co. bus.

Charged with tending to create a breach of the peace was Rudolph Reid, 19, of 2525 NW 67th St. He was released on $500 bond after three hours in City Jail.

Reid's arrest was the first here in connection with violation of city segregation laws since the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People announced last week it would push for desegregation on public buses.

An organizer of a local youth council in the NAACP, Reid denied he purposely wanted to be arrested in order to create a test case.

But an associate of his in the NAACP, Neal Adams, 39, said the bus company "will be sued" and that "it could mean a bus boycott."

Adams, president of the Brownsville Improvement Assn. which works closely with the NAACP, said his group "will give serious consideration to a boycott and decide whether to ask NAACP and other organizations to join in."

Octavio Cuevas, executive vice president of the Miami Transit Co., said Monday night his company "renders a service to the public and has no ax to grind.

"We have told all of our employes that they are to obey all the laws of the state and the city," he said. "Evidently the driver, Henry Albrandt, was acting under those general instructions.

"The driver called police and they made the arrest. They can't sue a citizen or a company for obeying the laws. If the laws are changed tomorrow, we will obey the new laws," Cuevas said.

Reid, who was graduated last week from Northwestern Senior High School, said he and two friends boarded a 27th Avenue bus to come downtown from NW 36th Street.

"My friends were sitting behind the back door and I was sitting across from the door," he said. "A white lady sitting behind me moved up front.

"The bus driver asked me to move to the rear of the bus and I refused. A policeman got on the bus at NW 27th Ave. and 7th St. I told him I didn't want to move back because it was too hot back there. He told me I was under arrest."

G. E. Graves Jr., attorney member of the NAACP committee on education and information, said at his home in Miami Monday night that he would represent Reid if asked to do so.

Graves said the matter would definitely be discussed by NAACP officers.

Local NAACP leaders voted here Friday to begin a program to end segregation by "lawful and reasonable" means and to use boycotts only as a "last resort."

Harold Jones, 35, of 2651 NW 27th Ave., a private investigator and former deputy sheriff, helped get Reid out of jail Monday. He is Reid's uncle and an active member of the NAACP.

Radio Patrolman K. M. Hardin, who made the arrest, could not be reached for comment Monday night. Reid will be tried in City Court at 8 a.m. Thursday.

Another Negro Disobeying Bus Rule Arrested

Wed. 6-13-56
Miami, Fla.

By BERT COLLIER
Herald Staff Writer

Miami police made a second arrest Tuesday of a Negro charged with refusing to ride in the segregated section of a Miami Transit Co. bus.

Mrs. Bessie Kerbo, 50, of 341 NW 10th St., was taken into custody as officials of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People were meeting to consider the earlier arrest of a Negro youth.

"Something has got to be done," said Neal Adams, president of the Brownsville Improvement Assn. He is active in the NAACP.

Adams suggested that test cases be made to attack the city ordinances requiring segregated seating on buses.

He said there have been other incidents, in addition to the ones resulting in arrests.

Numerous complaints have been made to his association about treatment of Negroes on buses of the Coast Cities Coaches, Adams said.

The NAACP will meet Wednesday night at the Afro-American Insurance Co. Policy to guide future action will be decided.

Another group, the Negro Citizens Service League, Inc., also called an emergency meeting for 12:15 today to consider the situation. It will be held in the league's headquarters, 914 NW 2nd Ave.

Sam Solomon, president, said his members are "alarmed at the threat of a bus boycott."

"We feel that before people become frenzied and form opinions, we should meet and take a definite stand in order to avoid unnecessary trouble," he declared.

Solomon added that there is strong sentiment against a bus boycott and a feeling that leaders should assert themselves to prevent incidents.

The legal approach, rather than a boycott of buses such as occurred in Montgomery and Tallahassee, appeared likely. Negro leaders seemed in agreement that a bus boycott here would be difficult to organize because of numbers of persons and distances of travel involved.

Mrs. Kerbo was arrested on a bus at NW 27th Avenue and 8th Street. She sat opposite the rear door and refused to move back when ordered to do so by the driver.

He summoned Police Sgt. J. P. Suggs, who placed the woman under arrest.

She was charged with disorderly conduct tending to create a breach of peace. She posted a $25 bond after some delay. Trial is at 8 a.m. Friday in City Court.

Rudolph Reid, 19, of 2525 NW 67th St., was arrested on the same charge Monday.

He was released under $25 bond for trial Thursday morning.

Reid, an official in the NAACP youth organization, will address the strategy meeting Wednesday night.

He was invited to tell his story to the group.

Bus Charge Dropped, Florida Negroes Freed

Inquirer Thurs. 5-31-56
Philadelphia, Pa. P. 2

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 30 (UP).—City authorities dropped charges against two Negro college students whose arrest for sitting beside a white woman in a bus touched off a spreading Negro boycott of Tallahassee city buses.

Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said the city had turned the matter over to authorities of Florida A. and M. University, which the students attend, "as we often do in certain types of cases involving white students at Florida State University here."

Wilhemina Jakes, 26, and Carrie Paterson, 20, had been free on $25 bond to appear in City Police Court Friday on charges of putting themselves in a position to incite a riot.

Stoutamire denied that the city charges were being dropped in order to appease Negro leaders, who are demanding the right for Negro bus riders to take vacant seats in the white section of buses when the Negro section at the rear is full.

"We would like, of course, to see integration on the buses, but we're not pulling at that bone now," said the Rev. C. K. Steele, local president of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People.

"But we do want seating on a first-come first-served basis and not have our tired people standing up looking at empty seats."

2 Negro Co-eds Intimidated in Fla.

Herald Tribune
Tues. 3-29-56
New York, N.Y.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 28 (AP).—Police reported a cross was burned last night on the front lawn of the residence of two Negro college girls who were arrested on a city bus Saturday.

The two, students at Florida A. & M. University here, were charged with placing themselves in a position to cause a riot after they refused to move to the rear of a city bus. P. 10 owned the house where the two roomed, said a car drove up in front of her home about 10 p. m., stopped a few minutes, then drove off at high speed. One of the girls noticed a fire and on examination found a small cross of crude wooden construction burning fiercely. Mrs. Kendrick said the two girls became frightened and moved into the college dormitory.

Police said Wilhelmina Jakes, twenty-six, and Carrie F. Patterson, twenty, sat down in a front seat next to a white woman and ignored a request by bus driver Max Coggins that they move to the back. They were released on $25 bond and a hearing was set in City Police Court for June 1.

Judge Suspends Negro's Sentence In Transit Case

MIAMI, Fla., June 14 (AP)—A 19-year-old Negro drew a suspended sentence today upon his conviction for breach of the peace by refusing to move to the rear of a bus. P. 6-A

And attorneys for Rudolph Reid, recent high school graduate, said the question of bus segregtion in Miami will be tossed into federal court.

Reid was fined $50 and costs or 24 days in jail by Municipal Judge Francis Sobieski, who suspended sentence from day to day for two years and said he hoped this would be the first and last incident involving bus segregation because such incidents lead to "turmoil."

"We are going to file suit in federal court to eliminate segregation on Miami buses," said G. E. Graves, attorney for Reid. "You can expect it in the near future."

Two Freed In Florida Bus Boycott But Others Join Negro Protest

Herald Tribune Thurs. 5-31-56 New York, N.Y. P. 5

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 30 (UP).—Police dropped charges today against two Negro co-eds who refused to move to the rear of a segregated bus, but other Negroes throughout the city joined in a boycott of the transit system.

"It's a matter of principles, not personalities," said the Rev. C. K. Steele, local president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Mr. Steele also was made chairman of a new inter-civic council formed to carry out the boycott.

Boycott leaders promised there would be "no violence, if it can be avoided." But racial uneasiness clearly was mounting in this state capital and university city, which has a white population of 23,708 and 14,392 Negroes.

Charges Dropped

The situation was similar to that in Montgomery, Ala., where Negroes have been boycotting buses for six months and now have a well developed private transport system of their own.

Charges of putting themselves in position to incite a riot were dropped against the two Florida A. & M. University (Negro) co-eds whose arrest precipitated the boycott here, first on the part of students and then joined by town Negroes.

The students had denounced what they termed "constant humiliation and intimidation" by white bus drivers. But Chief of Police Frank Stoutamire denied the charges were dropped to "appease" the Negro leadership. He said the case of the two co-eds merely was being turned over to A. & M. officials for handling, much as Florida State University, also situated here, has jurisdiction over student discipline.

500 at Mass Meeting

Five hundred Negroes, held a mass meeting and vowed to stay off the buses until the city meets their demands for "first-come, first-serve" seating.

The group formed a twenty-one-vehicle car pool to haul Negroes to and from work. A few Negroes rode buses today, but the car pool reported "hundreds of calls" for transportation.

In addition to demanding seats on buses, the Negroes also asked that they be shown more "courtesy" by drivers and that Negro drivers be hired on runs where passengers are predominantly Negro. The same demands have been made in Montgomery.

City Manager Arvah Hopkins, who met with Mr. Steele and other Negroes, and Mayor Fred Winterle declined comment "until we see the demands in writing." "The city isn't going to jump before it's time," Mayor Winterle said.

Florida Bus Integration Plans to Be Aired

Herald P. 14-a Tues. 11-27-56 Miami, Fla.

By RONALD YORK
Herald Staff Writer

How federal officials in South Florida will proceed in scrapping bus segregation laws will be decided at a meeting of U.S. District Attorneys in Washington Dec. 10.

But James L. Guilmartin, U.S. Attorney for South Florida, cautiously described the session as an "exploratory meeting." He would not comment further.

Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr. called for the conclave of DAs from 14 states still practicing bus segregation after a Supreme Court decision last Monday ruled such laws unconstitutional.

Such ordinances are now "dead letters," Brownell said, and the district attorneys will discuss the "methods most appropriate" for the Justice Department to take to "secure observance."

The prodigious task of getting copies of all local and state bus segregation laws has already begun, Guilmartin said. He'll carry them with him to Washington for reference.

The South Florida District covered by Guilmartin's office stretches from Key West to Jacksonville and to Tampa on the west. Scores of local ordinances preserve segregation on buses in the area.

Guilmartin said there is no precedent for his office to file either civil or criminal injunction suits to force compliance with the high court's decision.

How else the DA's office could "secure observance," in keeping with Brownell's intent, Guilmartin wasn't saying.

Florida Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin has said the Supreme Court's ruling outlawing segregated buses in Alabama does not nullify similar laws in Florida, but could be referred to in cases directly attacking Florida's segregation laws.

Boycott Leaders Face Fines

Herald Sat. 12-8-56 Miami, Fla.

TALLAHASSEE —(AP)— Negro bus boycott leaders were handed an ultimatum Friday to post $22,000 in appeal bonds by 11 a.m. Saturday or pay $11,000 in fines immediately.

City Judge John Rudd served the notice on the Negro Inter Civic Council, which sponsored car pools during the six-month-old boycott, and 21 of its members.

They were convicted Oct. 20 of operating an illegal transportation system.

Rudd said that unless the notices of appeal with the appeal bonds were filed and approved by the clerk of the Leon County Circuit Court by the new deadline sentence would be executed.

The council and each of the defendants were sentenced to a $500 fine or 60 days in jail. Rudd also imposed a mandatory 60-day jail sentence upon each defendant but suspended it and placed each on probation for one year.

Fla. bus boycotters to continue protest

BROOKLYN (ANP) — The five-and-a-half month boycott of City Transit Bus Co. lines in Tallahassee, Fla., will not cease until there is an agreement to "first come, first served" provisions for all passengers.

Such was the declaration of the Rev. Charles K. Steele last Monday at a mass meeting at Mt. Olive Baptist Church, Brooklyn.

The Rev. Mr. Steele, leader of the Inter-Civic Council and Tallahassee Branch NAACP, and pastor of Bethel Baptist Church, said if the 21 persons under conviction for operating a car pool do not win their appeal they may have to go to prison.

THE TREASURY of the council is far short of the $11,000 needed to pay the total fine, he said.

The State NAACP has given the service of its legal representative, Atty. Francisco Rodriques of Tampa, to defend the boycotters.

The Rev. Mr. Steele praised the NAACP and said that the appropriation of $50,000 by the State of Florida for an investigation of that organization and the Inter-Civic Council was a move to shut up these militant organizations.

Boycotters Dety Police Crackdown

By SAMUEL HOSKINS
AFRO Staff Correspondent

Baltimore Afro 38b Sat. 7-28-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—A determined effort is being made here to crack the seven-week-old bus boycott.

The effort involves the police department, the bus company, most of the members of the city commission and some members of the State House of Representatives.

Already the pressure has caused a number of repercussions.

Responding to veiled threats of mass arrests of car pool drivers, Dan Speed, transportation chairman of the Intercity Civic Association, said:

"We stand ready and willing to fill up the jail, if they wish to arrest us for standing up for our rights."

ANSWERING THE promise of a State Legislator to sponsor a law designed to "break the back of the boycott" the Rev. Charles Kinzie King, president of the Civic Association, declared:

"If they arrest us, we will test their new laws."

He promised the drivers the services of the best legal talent in the country.

In this connection, another ICA official revealed to the AFRO that the organization has been in contact with Roy Wilkins, executive director of the NAACP.

It is understood Wilkins promised the local group to "send lawyers into Tallahassee on the next plane" to defend persons who may be arrested.

THERIES LINDSEY, Attorney for ICA, has requested FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover to investigate a report from Chicago that police there are "investigating" him at the request of someone in "official position" in Tallahassee. He says the Chicago probe is because of his work with the boycott.

Typical of the reaction of the majority of the colored people here to the apparent boycott crackdown was the comment Friday by a woman employee at Florida A and M. University.

Commenting on the stopping of two cars and the questioning of the drivers and eight passengers at police headquarters, the woman observed:

"Pretty soon, in order to be a respectable citizen, you will have to have been arrested."

Service was suspended July 1, due to loss of revenues because of the boycott.

The announcement made it plain that buses will be operated mainly for white riders.

Asked to comment on this arrangement, Chief Stoutamire asked: "What's wrong with that? The white folks will be riding and the colored people walking."

He added: "They won't want to ride the bus, so let 'em walk."

THE CHIEF HINTED however that arrests of car-pool drivers are pending. "We are looking into the law 'for hire' car regulations. If we find that the law is being violated, we will enforce the law," he added.

Rep. J. Kenneth Ballinger, who was defeated after campaigning on a pro-school segregation platform, is sponsoring the anti-boycott bill in the current special session of the legislature, which convened Monday.

Referring to the leadership of the boycott, he said; "These leaders have been laying the foundation for years or more.

"They demonstrated that they can and would weld the colored population into an effective voting bloc."

THS IS BELIEVED to have been a reference to his defeat. The bulk of the colored voters are in the district he represents.

Rep. James M. Beck is sponsoring a bill to make it unlawful for any state employee to take part in an organized boycott.

This proposed legislation is designed to curb the activities of FAMU faculty members who have been linked to the bus boycott.

The drivers stopped by police and taken to headquarters on Friday were identified as Johnnie Cook, 2220 Keith St., and Paul McGee.

She said police questioned her about 20 minutes. "They tried to make me say I paid money to ride," she declared.

All of the women, who were en route to work, were late getting to their jobs, she declared.

CALL CAB OR WALK

Transit Service Calls End To Bus Runs In Tallahassee

Montgomery

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 1 (AP) —It was call a cab or walk today for those among Tallahassee's 26,000 white residents who depend upon public transit facilities.

Cities Transit Co. suspended service on its bus routes last midnight as a result of a month-long boycott by Negro patrons. The Negroes normally supplied about 70 per cent of the bus company's revenue.

Cities Transit had serviced Florida's capital city since 1940.

Stetson Coleman, president of the company, announced 10 days ago bus service would end July 1 unless some solution was found to get the city's 14,000 Negroes back on the buses.

The last hope for a compromise ended Friday night when the Negro Inter-Civic Council refused to retreat on its demands for an end to segregated seating on the buses and immediate employment of Negro drivers.

The city had agreed to amend the bus franchise to permit open seating on the predominantly Negro lines except for one three-passenger lateral seat at the front which would have been reserved for white and to allow employment of Negro drivers at the discretion of the company.

The city apparently has no plan for any kind of emergency service. Commissioner W. T. Mayo, who has been the city's spokesman during the boycott, was not available for comment today, but there has been nothing from the city to indicate any emergency measures are contemplated to provide public transportation.

Tallahassee Rejects Negro Plan—Buses Halt Tonight

Sat. 6-30-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 29 (UP) — The City Commission rejected today a final proposal by the Negro inter-civic council for ending the bus boycott. Commissioner W. T. Mayo said "only a miracle" could keep the buses running after tomorrow.

C. L. Carter, manager of Cities Transit, which runs thirteen buses and employs twenty-two persons, would suspend indefinitely at midnight tomorrow. This would leave this city of 48,000 persons without public transportation except for taxis.

He said the company would sell most of its buses but retain its plant "and we'll be ready to be back in business when we feel it is financially feasible." Mr. Carter said the company would "take care" of its employes in other jobs.

Cities Transit, which operates under a city franchise, has suffered a 60 per cent loss in revenue since most of Tallahassee's 14,000 Negroes stopped using the buses May 28 in protest against segregated seating.

Negro Boycott Stops Buses at Tallahassee

Post + Times Herald p.1 Sun. 7-1-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 30 (AP)—Tallahassee's buses will stop rolling at midnight tonight as a result of a 5-week Negro boycott protesting segregated seating practice, leaving 48,000 residents without any public transportation.

Washington D.C.

City Commissioners rejected a final proposal in the tug-of-war with a firm "no" to demands of the Negro Inter-Civic Council for integrated seating. Leaders of the Council have been furnishing transportation for boycotters.

Transit manager C. L. Carter said the company will suspend service indefinitely, leaving the city's residents without any public transportation except for taxicabs.

Carter said the company suffered a 60-per-cent loss since most of the city's 14,000 Negroes stopped using the buses May 28.

"If it becomes financially feasible to go back to work, we'll be ready," he said, "although the situation now doesn't look too good."

He said the 35 persons employed by the company would be "taken care of" in other jobs.

FLORIDA

Two-Edged Boycott

In Florida's easygoing capital of Tallahassee (pop. 42,000), the new-found Negro weapon of the bus boycott proved to have a sharp and painful double edge last week. For five weeks, while Negroes refused to ride segregated buses (TIME, June 18), Negro and white civic leaders tried to work out a solution. Despite some broad concessions by the all-white city commission, e.g., first-come-first-served seating (but no side-by-side mixing of races), the Negroes held out doggedly for complete abolition of segregation—or nothing. Last week, acknowledging an all too effective 60% loss in revenue, the Cities Transit Co. announced that it was suspending operations, selling off Tallahassee's buses to other cities. Said a Cities Transit spokesman as service came to a stop: "The boycott is over because there is nothing to boycott."

Appeals To Citizens Not Needed

Norfolk, Va.

Police Arresting Car-Pool Drivers; Council Plans Test

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Since the "Free-Day" of August 2, three weeks ago, a few shamed-faced Negroes have been riding the buses. Though the number normally seen on the bus is five or six, the number has steadily decreased until on August 22 nine out of every ten buses which travel the A. and M.-Frenchtown routes have one or less.

These few riders have a tendency ot slump down in their seats or turn their heads when the people on the streets stare at them.

THIS IS IN deep contrast to the situation which existed prior to the bus protest, in which the buses were crowded with standing room only, especially during the early morning and evening hours, while people were going to and from work.

The Negroes have followed their leaders better than the whites have followed their leaders in this issue.

EVERY ATTEMPT to get the white citizens to cooperate and ride the bus has failed. Before the buses were taken off on June 30th, an appeal was made by the daily newspaper to the white citizens to leave their cars home and ride the buses, or the city would lose its public transportation system. This effort failed as indicated by the "taking off" of the buses.

When the buses were put back on, another "ride the bus" campaign was sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce. All sorts of concessions were being made to bus riders, such as free orange juice, morning papers, mailing letters, etc. They reported that a thousand civic workers were combing the white neighborhoods in an effort to sell bus passbooks at a dollar and a quarter per week. They reported a gross sale of $800 or less than one book per worker.

WHEN THE buses actually started rolling again, there were even fewer whites riding the bus than before they went out of business. They explained that by saying that some people had made other arrangements while the buses were out of business.

In a protest movement such as this, the Negro leaders have admonished that Negroes should stay off the buses until they get decency. With no more people riding the buses than are now riding, it is roughly estimated that the Negro is cooperating by roughly 98 per cent. What leader could ask for more?

WEDNESDAY, August 22, the police department began arresting any Negro with a group of people in his car, the charge being that of violating the "vehicle for hire" law. The bond for this offense is $150.

In the opinion of many, this is another intimidation move on their part, designed to stop Negroes from picking up the people who are walking. If they can do this, they can make the people ride the bus, they hope.

The Inter-Civic Council plans to test this law all the way to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary.

Transit Lines Resume Runs In Tallahassee

Fri. 8-3-56 Montgomery

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Aug. 2 (AP)—Tallahassee buses resumed operation today with two Negro drivers and a number of Negro riders, but the leader of the Negro boycott declared there would be no letdown in efforts to obtain integrated seating.

The Rev. C. K. Steele said his followers "will not be herded like cattle to the rear of a bus though driven by Negro drivers."

The statement by the president of the Negro Inter Civic Council, which sponsored the boycott as a protest against segregated seating, came as buses started up again after month-long suspension.

"Our request for the time being is for democracy, fairness and decency in bus accommodations for our people," Steele said. "This we have not been promised. Consequently, our protest of love, prayer and faith continues."

In a surprise move the Cities Transit Co., assigned two Negro drivers to Negro routes.

However, the council's demand for integrated seating was turned down and passengers took seats on the same segregated basis as before the boycott started May 28.

The Rev. K. S. DuPont, council vice president, reported council members agreed at a meeting last night there will be no attempt to prevent anyone from riding the buses but that car pools will be kept in operation.

Bus rides were free today to celebrate the first day of resumed service.

Charles Carter, manager of the transit firm, said that the number of white riders today was about double that previously.

Boycotters Lost, Says Gov. Collins

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Tues. 7-3-56

5 Tallahassee Buses Sold; Service Ends

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 2 (AP)—Gov. Leroy Collins said today he regards the Negro bus boycott as a "miscarriage of ambition."

Gov. Collins

His statement came after the Cities Transit Co., suspended the service made unprofitable by loss of Negro patronage and began selling off its buses. Five buses left Tallahassee today to be delivered to a purchaser in Cuba.

Between 1,500 and 1,700 white persons are having to make other arrangements for transportation. Apparently they are either walking or getting rides from neighbors because taxicab companies reported little or no increase in business.

"Efforts made here by the NAACP (National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People) which have resulted in discontinuance of bus service in this community, I regarded as a miscarriage of ambition," Collins said.

"If this organization is interested in advancing the welfare of our Negro citizens, it should concern itself with other conditions of far more importance than where people sit on buses.

"There are many areas for real and substantial improvement such as health standards, moral standards and educational standards, in which they could become engaged with a great deal more benefit to the people they represent."

Collins cited efforts made to improve conditions for Negroes in Tallahassee in recent years and declared "the tragedy of this bus situation is that it has gained nothing for the Negroes and much has been lost in the tensions and antagonisms which have been developed. . . .

"I frankly think that the Negroes had some just grievances about the operation of the bus service. But it is clear to me that the city authorities indicated in good faith a willingness to adjust these grievances."

NEGROES RIDING ON BUSES AGAIN

Will Be No Intimidation, Say Boycott Heads

Sat. 8-4-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Aug. 3 (AP)—Numbers of Negro passengers were back on Tallahassee buses Thursday with assurances from boycott leaders there would be no intimidation of those who choose to ride.

The busses went back in service Thursday after being off the streets for a month because of a Negro boycott protesting segregated seating. In a surprise move, the Cities Transit Company employed two Negro drivers and assigned them to routes. Seating still was segregated, however.

K. S. DuPont, vice-president of the Negro inter civic council which spearheaded the boycott, said it was agreed at a council meeting Thursday night that there would be no interference with Negroes who want to use the buses but that car pools would be maintained for those who wish to continue the boycott.

Many Negroes were using the buses Thursday but since rides were free to celebrate the first day of resumed service it remained to be seen what the situation will be when fares start being collected Friday.

When the boycott was started, Negroes demanded integrated seating, employment of Negro drivers and more courteous treatment for members of their race.

Negroes again ride Tallahassee buses

Times 8-4-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Aug. 4—(AP)—Cities Transit Co. reported that 450 Negroes rode city buses yesterday and the total might go even higher today.

Charles L. Carter, manager of the transit firm, said about 460 fares were recorded on the run to the predominately Negro routes and all but a small number of these were Negroes.

He said there also was a scattering of Negroes on buses serving the predominately white routes. The number of white riders was running about the same as it has been.

Bus service was resumed Thursday after a month shutdown, with Negro drivers employed on the Negro routes.

Temporary suspension of bus operations was ordered July 1 as a result of financial losses resulting from the boycott by Negro riders. The Chamber of Commerce has spearheaded a ride the bus campaign.

Gallup Survey Finds Opposition To Travel Bias Ban Slightly Less

New York, N. Y.

By John M. Fenton
Gallup Poll Staff

PRINCETON, N. J., Feb. 26.—Just how strongly does the average Southerner feel about desegregation?

One needs to penetrate only a few miles into the South to become aware of the impact of the Supreme Court's decision. In the thirteen Southern states today, everybody is talking about the possible end of segregation.

In Raleigh, a service station operator said: "We aren't ready for it yet. The average Negro's standard of living and morals are below the average white person's. It will have to be forced on the people before they will accept it."

In Birmingham, a millwright reasoned: "It's a different nationality of people and a different race altogether. Eventually there will be inter-marriage and I don't approve of this."

Time and time again, one hears reactions similar to these as he travels through the South today. They give some indication of the resoluteness with which the white Southerner is keeping to his convictions about the merits of continued segregation.

This reporter has just returned from a 4,000-mile tour of the South, during which he spoke with many Southerners—both white and Negro. Aided by the public opinion reporters of the Institute's Southern staff, we interviewed a representative cross-section of adults in all parts of the South—from Virginia to Texas.

Our goal was to get a true picture of how the South stands on the complex problem of integration and—more important—to probe into what lies behind the average Southerner's viewpoint—the "why" of public opinion.

All in all, we found eight out of ten Southern whites opposed to the Supreme Court's outlawing of segregation in the public schools.

Opinion is slightly less opposed to the recent Interstate Commerce Commission ruling which outlawed segregated travel between states on buses, trains and in public waiting rooms.

There are still about three out of four Southern whites, however, who oppose such a move.

The questions and results:

"The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

SOUTHERN WHITES ONLY
Approve	16%
Disapprove	80
Undecided	4

"The Interstate Commerce Commission has ruled that racial segregation on trains, buses and in public waiting rooms must end. Do you approve or disapprove of this ruling?"

SOUTHERN WHITES ONLY
Approve	19%
Undecided	5

The wide split in opinion that the segregation issue has brought to the American domestic scene is illustrated by the vote of people in the thirty-five states outside the South on the two issues—as recorded in the latest Institute survey:

SUPREME COURT'S DECISION

Outside the South
Approve	71%
Disapprove	24
Undecided	5

I. C. C.'S RULING

Outside the South
Approve	67%
Disapprove	24
Undecided	9

The degree of opposition to both rulings in the South is directly related to the size of the Negro population in each of the thirteen states.

In the "border states" of Kentucky, Tennessee, Oklahoma and Texas, for example, where the white-Negro ratio averages eight whites to one Negro, we found nearly one white in four approving of the Supreme Court's decision. Better than one in four favors the I. C. C.'s ruling.

Even in these states, however, there is still a large majority of whites who oppose integration on both counts.

Moving into what might be termed the "Mid-South states" of Florida, Virginia, Arkansas and North Carolina—where Negroes constitute, on the average, about 24 per cent of the total population — we discovered slightly greater opposition, with about one white person in five favoring mixed schools and a little more than this approving on the I. C. C. question.

It is in the five states of the Deep South—Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, South Carolina and Mississippi—where the greatest opposition and bitterest resentment are found. In these areas—where more than one-third of the population is Negro—nearly nine out of ten whites are opposed on both questions.

Only about one white person in seventeen in these states registers approval of the Supreme Court's decision. Integration on trains, buses and in waiting rooms is approved by one person in twelve.

Talking to whites practically anywhere in the South, one quickly discovers a deep-seated conviction that "the races just weren't meant to mix"—that the white man and Negro exist on two entirely separate planes and that it would be wrong to try to change this.

Behind this conviction are religious reasons, cultural and traditional reasons, moral reasons, and in many cases a bid for the "separate but equal" doctrine as the only solution to the racial problem.

There are other reasons why the white person disapproves of integration. In some instances, it is fear over the trouble or violence that mixing races might cause. In a few scattered cases, it is a protest against what he considers to be a violation of the State's Rights doctrine.

But the feeling that there is something inherently wrong in mixing Caucasian and Negro is, far and away, the reason cited most frequently by the white people as why they oppose integration.

Can't See the Need

Many Southerners cannot understand why there is a need for integration when the Negroes have what the whites consider to be perfectly adequate facilities at present. With the doctrine of "separate but equal," they justify their opposition to the Supreme Court's decision of two years ago.

In some cases, the opposition to mixing races stems from an actual dislike of the Negro or his habits, which some whites say they find distasteful. This kind of sentiment is found most frequently in the heavily Negro areas of the Deep South.

In another category are those whites who fear the consequences of integration—the trouble or violence that may result from mixing the races. Generally speaking, these persons tend to feel that "the time has not yet come" for integration to be a feature of the Southern way of life.

The case for integration—the viewpoint of a small minority of whites—is upheld, practically without exception, because it is the more "democratic" thing to do or that "a person shouldn't be discriminated against just because of his skin."

Md. Educator Sees Success Of Integration

Post-Times Herald P. 3 Wed. 3-21-56
Washington, D.C.

NEW ORLEANS, March 20 (AP)—A Maryland educator says he doesn't think "our white children have suffered" as a result of school integration.

Thomas A. Van Sant, Director of the Division of Adult Education in Baltimore, said Monday, "There is no record of lowering the education level, nor any indication we have more health problems than before."

He added that desegregation has been a "tremendous boost to the Negro children" and that he feels the move may have instilled a motivation to "strive a little harder."

Desegregation in Baltimore schools, he said, may be important in helping to remove the "social and economic barriers" to Negro participation in other fields.

"It probably has eased the racial problem," he said.

As to intermarriage between white persons and Negroes in Baltimore, "they just don't do it," he added.

Boycott Conviction

Evening Star P. 4-A
Washington D. C.
Feb 25-24-56

It could have been predicted with almost mathematical certainty that the Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., would be convicted in the Montgomery, Alabama, bus-boycott case. And it can be predicted with almost as much confidence that this conviction will not survive the test of appeal.

For there are really only two ways of looking at this case. It is an attempt, under a 1921 antiunion law, to punish Mr. King as a leader of Montgomery Negroes who refused to patronize a bus-line because they objected to its segregation and other policies. Or it is an attempt, by indirection, to compel the Negroes to give up their boycott and go back to patronizing the buses under conditions that are objectionable to them.

In either situation, we do not believe that the appellate courts will affirm the conviction. For the time has long since passed when citizens can be treated as criminals for refusing to patronize a private business concern. This boycott would have been justified had it been aimed at poor service or unclean buses. Is it less so because it was aimed at segregation on the buses and discourteous drivers? If the Alabama authorities think the answer is in the affirmative, one can only suggest that their thinking is far behind the times in which they are living.

Socialist Leader Covering Montgomery Boycott Trials

Montgomery, Ala.

Lies, 3-20-56

By JOE AZBELL
Advertiser City Editor

He is Farrell Dobbs, New York, who was a candidate for president of the United States in 1948 and 1952 on the Socialist Workers Party ticket. He is covering the trials for Militant, a labor weekly.

Dobbs, who has been connected with the Socialist Workers Party for 22 years is currently secretary of the organization. The party is a splinter of the old Third International following a break between Trotsky and Stalin. Dobbs' party, while admitting it has a revolutionary purpose in establishing a socialist government in the United States, is opposed to the old Stalin brand of socialism or the Russian brand of today.

Dobbs said the Socialist Workers Party is listed as subversive on the Attorney General's list but added that the recent case of James Kutcher, a legless veteran who was a party member, has thrown new light on this listing. Kutcher's pension as a veteran was withdrawn because of his party membership but later was reinstated after a hearing of VA officials. Dobbs said his group had sought hearings to deny the tag of "subversive" but these requests had been turned down.

The 48-year-old Dobbs, who is married and the father of three daughters, said his group does not advocate violence but does advocate a revolutionary method of seeking to secure a majority vote to support a socialist system of government in this country.

The Socialist Workers Party was organized along the ideas of Trotsky who broke with Stalin and, as Dobbs puts it, "was assassinated by one of Stalin's hatchet men."

Dobbs, an easy going, pleasant man with an appealing personality, said that he had come to Montgomery to cover the boycott trials because the trials were of interest from a "democratic viewpoint."

"I believe their (the Negroes') demands are democratic and certainly they are entitled to full equality as citizens," he said, "I am interested in the trials because of the demand for democratic rights which our group adheres to strongly."

When asked by another person if he was sympathetic to the south's position in its racial problem, Dobbs said that while he could understand a problem existed, he could not sympathize with it because it was "wrong for a person to keep his foot on another person's head in a democracy and prevent that person from achieving his democratic rights."

Dobbs entered the courtroom quietly and took his seat with other reporters. He covered the hearings attentively and showed particular interest in the activities of the attorneys, as they exchange legal words.

In an interview, Dobbs emphasized that the Socialist Workers Party is "anti-Stalinist" and that Russian communists had opposed his organization.

He said that his group was formed because Trotsky who with Lenin was one of the prime movers of the communist revolution in Russia desired to create a world socialist movement while Stalin desired to create a socialist movement within a nation first.

Following a conflict between Stalin and Trotsky, Trotsky moved from one country to another, finally ending up in Mexico where he was assassinated in 1940.

Before Trotsky was assassinated, Dobbs had visited the political figure in Mexico.

In his race for president in 1952, Dobbs received 10,306 votes. His largest vote was in New Jersey where he polled 3,850 votes and in New York where he received 2,212 votes but he was on the ballot on Wisconsin, Washington, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, and Michigan.

He said that "roughly there are about 25,000 supporters of the Social Workers Party" in this country.

No Bus Segregation

Herald Tribune

The United States Supreme Court does not—indeed cannot—pass laws. What it can do—and does do—is interpret measures adopted by legislative organs and rule upon whether such measures are permissible under our Constitution. Thus the decisions of the Court become, in fact, a part of the law of the land until the Congress amends the Constitution and the amendment is ratified by at least thirty-six of the forty-eight states.

Last week the Court handed down a unanimous decision which had the effect of voiding segregation laws in twelve Southern states. These laws said that Negroes and whites must be separated when riding on local, or intrastate, buses. The court said that they were unconstitutional.

Actually, it simply affirmed such a decision by a lower court, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va., but the effect was the same. The Court of Appeals ruling was made in a case in which a Negro woman was evicted from a bus after she insisted on taking a seat in a section reserved for white passengers.

The decision was another blow at the "separate but equal" concept which dates back to 1887. Last November the Interstate Commerce Commission abandoned this doctrine. It declared at that time that segregation of rail and bus passengers, in vehicles or stations, was unlawful. The I. C. C. order went into effect on Jan. 10, and segregation on interstate transportation came to an end without incident.

But the Southern states insisted that local transportation is an entirely different matter. The decision was branded as an "unwarranted invasion of state and municipal rights." Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia voiced general sentiment in the South when he said that it would be resisted "by all possible legal means."

The bus lines were perfectly willing to comply and several instructed drivers at once that they need no longer enforce segregation in their vehicles. This seemed to promise trouble because a number of states insisted that public carriers must obey these laws as well as others applying to them.

A typical case was that of the Montgomery City Lines in Montgomery, Ala. Negroes there have been boycotting the line. As soon as the Supreme Court ruling became known, the operators ordered segregation ended. The Montgomery police commissioner thereupon ordered the arrest of any passenger or driver involved in race mixing. The line also faced the threat of losing its franchise unless it reverses its position.

U. S. to Stress 'Voluntary Compliance' In Desegregation of Bus Travel

Post Times Herald Washington, D.C.

Times. 12-11-56

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. said yesterday that the Federal Goverment will stress "voluntary compliance" with the Supreme Court's decision outlawing racial segregation in public transportation.

The statement differed considerably from one on Nov. 19, when he said bluntly that attempts to enforce segregation laws on public transportation would constitute a "crime against the United States." He thus emphasized the possibility of criminal penalties.

Yesterday's statement came after a day-long conference with 33 United States District Attorneys from 14 Southern and border States—the men most likely to be called upon to prosecute any violations. Brownell said he was "pleased" with the conference, held behind closed doors in the Justice Department.

Strategy Session

The Attorney General called the conference to discuss how best to back up the Nov. 13 Supreme Court decision which struck down bus segregation laws in Montgomery, Ala., and the State of Alabama, and thus the South.

Brownell concluded a brief statement with:

"In the application of the Constitution to segregation on all common carriers, primary emphasis will be placed upon voluntary compliance with the law as enunciated by the Supreme Court of the United States."

He did not say what would be done if "voluntary compliance" did not work.

Some transit companies in the South may find themselves caught between the Supreme Court decision and a local insistence on enforcing segregation laws. Brownell may have had this in mind when he said:

"Upon request, conferences with common carriers to define their legal rights and responsibilities will be held."

Interstate Ruling

He recalled that the Interstate Commerce Commission last year ruled out segregation in transit companies which cross state lines. The Nov. 13 decision, he stated, established that segregation on intrastate transportation violates the due process and equal protection clauses of the 14th Amendment.

The State of Alabama and the city of Birmingham both have asked the Supreme Court to reconsider its Nov. 15 decision. The Court took no action on the requests yesterday. Until it does, official notification of the decision will not be sent to Montgomery, where a special three-judge court first declared the state and city bus segregation laws unconstitutional.

COMPLIANCE STRESSED

Brownell, Federal Attorneys Discuss Ways To Enforce Supreme Court Ruling If South Should Balk

By ROBERT F. COLL
United Press Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10. — Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr. Monday offered the services of the Justice Department as a legal adviser to bus firms, railroads, and airlines seeking to abolish racial segregation.

But he said the department still will stress "voluntary compliance" in wiping out segregation on common carriers engaged in both interstate traffic and travel within a state.

The attorney general declined to say what steps would be taken by the Federal Government should "voluntary compliance" fail.

Rehearing Move Pending

He reported on the department's position at the close of a one-day meeting of United States attorneys from 14 Southern and border states. They discussed means of enforcing a Supreme Court decision barring segregation on intrastate buses in Montgomery, Ala.

A move for a rehearing of the case is pending before the high court.

Mr. Brownell said the conferees "considered at length those measures most appropriate for the Department of Justice to take to perform its duty under the law."

He said that "upon request," he will hold conferences with the carriers "to define their legal rights and responsibilities."

The conferences would be held here or where the carriers want.

Mr. Brownell cited a year-old Interstate Commerce Commission ruling barring separation of the races by interstate carriers.

'Dead Letter'

He also pointed out that under the court's decision in the Montgomery case continued segregation in intrastate carriers "violated the due process and equal protection clauses" of the Constitution.

In calling Monday's conference, Mr. Brownell told the Federal attorneys it was clear from the high court's finding in the Montgomery case that segregation laws in other states would have to be "regarded as a dead letter."

Officials in several Southern states have insisted that segregation in local transportation will continue regardless of any action taken by Mr. Brownell and Government prosecutors.

If "voluntary compliance" fails and the Government should decide to take action, it might move under one of two Federal laws.

Local Juries

One statute makes it a crime to conspire to deprive citizens of rights guaranteed by the Constitution. Maximum penalty could be a $5,000 fine and 10 years imprisonment.

The second provides penalties for anyone acting "under cover of law" to deprive persons of privileges and immunities protected by the Constitution. Maximum penalty is a year in prison and a $1,000 fine.

In either instance a violation would be tried in the district where the crime was committed. Grand and trial juries would be composed of local citizens who might be more in sympathy with local laws than Federal statutes.

A change of venue in such cases would not be possible for the Government.

Brownell Confers With 14 Southern Attorneys General

By ARTHUR KRANISH

WASHINGTON.—(INS) — Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. has expressed hope that southern transportation companies will voluntarily abolish racial segregation of passengers without direct federal intervention.

The justice department chief explained this policy late Monday after an all-day meeting with federal prosecutors from 14 southern and border states which still permit some form of "jim crow" travel.

Brownell announced that he will place "primary emphasis" on "voluntary compliance" with Supreme court decisions which hold that all segregation on common carriers violates the constitution and federal law.

The attorney general refused to answer when a newsman asked him what steps would be taken if transportation companies refuse to comply.

Brownell followed up his plea for voluntary compliance with an offer to confer with transportation officials "to define their legal rights and responsibilities."

Spokesmen insisted that the attorney general was not backing down from an earlier statement in which he pointedly referred to laws which make it a federal crime to refuse Negroes their constitutional rights.

Last year the Interstate Commerce commission outlawed racial segregation on carriers which cross state lines. Last month the Supreme court delivered another blow at segregation by declaring that the constitution forbids state and local laws which require segregation on trains, buses or streetcars travelling within the borders of a single state.

At Monday's closed-door meeting U. S. attorneys presented a summary of state and local laws in southern and border states on the segregation question.

Officials said the federal prosecutors were told to return to their home communities and encourage transportation officials to voluntarily abandon segregation.

The prosecutors, it was reported, would also operate as "listening posts" for the attorney general, sending to Washington information on the progress made and suggestions for possible federal action—if necessary.

He Says U. S. Will Stress 'Voluntary' Compliance With Following Edicts

U.S. ATTORNEYS CALLED TO BUS RULING PARLEY

Daily Tribune Tues. 11-20-56

Chicago, Ill.

14 State Session Set by Brownell

P. 12

Washington, Nov. 19 (AP)—Atty. Gen. Brownell today summoned federal prosecutors in 14 southern states to a Washington conference on how to carry out the United States Supreme court decree against racial segregation on buses.

He set the date, in a circular letter to the 34 United States district attorneys in the 14 states, as Dec. 10.

Brownell's letter said that it is clear from the Supreme court decision of Nov. 13 on the Montgomery, Ala., bus segregation case, that discrimination against bus passengers on account of race is "a crime against the United States."

Test Cases Forecast

A number of state and municipal government spokesmen in southern states have spoken out against the court's Montgomery ruling; several have indicated that various state laws against mixing of races on transportation systems would have to be tested in separate court actions. They said that pending such tests, segregation would be continued on buses.

The Montgomery case was marked by a long bus boycott by Negroes against segregated travel.

Justice Black of the Supreme court issued a statement today saying that after consulting with all other members of the court, he was refusing to order immediate issuance of the court's notice of the decision.

Takes 25 Days

Counsel for Montgomery Negroes in the case had asked last Saturday that the notification be sent out at once. Normal procedure takes 25 days. The request came before Black in his capacity as presiding judge for the 5th United States Circuit court.

Supreme court aids said the bus case notice now may be mailed about Dec. 12. It will go to members of a special court which sat in Montgomery and handed down the anti-segregation decision affirmed by the Supreme court.

Brownell's letter calling the justice department conference went to United States attorneys in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

Subject of Conference

Brownell told them the conference "will consider and decide upon measures most appropriate to secure observance of the United States Constitution and laws by carriers and all others who may hereafter require segregation of white and colored passengers on common carriers."

The attorney general told the district attorneys to bring with them copies of state or local laws relating to racial segregation. He said the Nov. 13 court decision, which struck down Montgomery and Alabama statutes, makes it clear "that any such law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter."

"It is also clear," he added, "that the enforcement or observance of any such discriminatory measure by any common carrier of passengers will constitute in the future and in the light of the unmistakable declaration of the federal courts a willful deprivation by the carrier of the Constitutional rights, privileges and immunities of those discriminated against and a crime against the United States."

Others "Equally Guilty"

"Anyone who commands, induces, procures, counsels, aids or abets the carrier in the commission of such crime is equally guilty," he said.

Officials of the city of Montgomery asserted after the court decision that they would use every legal means available to continue separate seating arrangements for Negroes and Whites on Montgomery buses. They said this was required to preserve public safety and promote order.

Nonsegregated operation was attempted last spring by the private bus company which serves Montgomery, but was dropped under a state court order.

PRINCETON, N. J., Feb. 28 The Supreme Court's historic integration decision has directly confronted the 40 million people of the South with a problem as grave and unsettling as they have ever had to face.

On the one hand, an overwhelming majority of the South's 30 million whites as reported Monday are bitterly opposed to the idea of integration with the Negro.

On the other hand, there are the South's 10 million Negroes. What does the Southern Negro want?

Results of our interviewing show that by a 3-to-2 ratio he wants to have an integrated educational system. About one Negro in nine at this time is undecided.

Negro sentiment is more strongly in favor of ending segregation in waiting rooms, buses and trains. The recent Interstate Commerce Commission ruling which outlawed segregated travel between states is approved of 6-to-1. Only about one Negro in 25 is undecided on this point.

The questions that we asked and their results:

"The United States Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

SOUTHERN NEGROES ONLY

Approve	53%
Disapprove	36
Undecided	11

"The Interstate Commerce Commission has ruled that racial segregation on trains, buses and in public waiting rooms must end. Do you approve or disapprove of this ruling?"

SOUTHERN NEGROES ONLY

Approve	82%
Disapprove	14
Undecided	4

In determining the Negro viewpoint, we had conversations with hundreds of Negroes in all parts of the South. Negroes living on farms and in the cities were given a chance to express their views.

To make sure that a true picture of Negro opinion was obtained, the Institute assigned both white and Negro reporters to the work on this phase of the study. It is interesting to note that the results of the work of both Negro and white interviewers, on both questions, showed Negroes in favor of integration.

Socialist Leader Covering Montgomery Boycott Trials

Montgomery, Ala

Tues. 3-20-56

By JOE AZBELL
Advertiser City Editor

He is Farrell Dobbs, New York, who was a candidate for president of the United States in 1948 and 1952 on the Socialist Workers Party ticket. He is covering the trials for Militant, a labor weekly.

Dobbs, who has been connected with the Socialist Workers Party for 22 years is currently secretary of the organization. The party is a splinter of the old Third International following a break between Trotsky and Stalin. Dobbs' party, while admitting it has a revolutionary purpose in establishing a socialist government in the United States, is opposed to the old Stalin brand of socialism or the Russian brand of today.

Dobbs said the Socialist Workers Party is listed as subversive on the Attorney General's list but added that the recent case of James Kutcher, a legless veteran who was a party member, has thrown new light on this listing. Kutcher's pension as a veteran was withdrawn because of his party membership but later was reinstated after a hearing of VA officials. Dobbs said his group had sought hearings to deny the tag of "subversive" but these requests had been turned down.

The 48-year-old Dobbs, who is married and the father of three daughters, said his group does not advocate violence but does advocate a revolutionary method of seeking to secure a majority vote to support a socialist system of government in this country.

The Socialist Workers Party was organized along the ideas of Trotsky who broke with Stalin and, as Dobbs puts it, "was assassinated by one of Stalin's hatchet men."

Adv. 3-20-56

Dobbs, an easy going, pleasant man with an appealing personality, said that he had come to Montgomery to cover the boycott trials because the trials were of interest from a "democratic viewpoint."

"I believe their (the Negroes') demands are democratic and certainly they are entitled to full equality as citizens," he said, "I am interested in the trials because of the demand for democratic rights which our group adheres to strongly."

When asked by another person if he was sympathetic to the south's position in its racial problem, Dobbs said that while he could understand a problem existed, he could not sympathize with it because it was "wrong for a person to keep his foot on another person's head in a democracy and prevent that person from achieving his democratic rights."

Dobbs entered the courtroom quietly and took his seat with other reporters. He covered the hearings attentively and showed particular interest in the activities of the attorneys, as they exchange legal words.

In an interview, Dobbs emphasized that the Socialist Workers Party is "anti-Stalinist" and that Russian communists had opposed his organization.

He said that his group was formed because Trotsky who with Lenin was one of the prime movers of the communist revolution in Russia desired to create a world socialist movement while Stalin desired to create a socialist movement within a nation first.

Following a conflict between Stalin and Trotsky, Trotsky moved from one country to another, finally ending up in Mexico where he was assassinated in 1940.

Before Trotsky was assassinated, Dobbs had visited the political figure in Mexico.

In his race for president in 1952, Dobbs received 10,306 votes. His largest vote was in New Jersey where he polled 3,850 votes and in New York where he received 2,212 votes but he was on the ballot on Wisconsin, Washington, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, and Michigan.

He said that "roughly there are about 25,000 supporters of the Social Workers Party" in this country.

Boycott Threats Hit Other Cities

Dixie's public transportation systems, caught in the tentacles of the boycott, are in "danger" of being squeezed into submission to integration.

Florida Negroes, inspired by Alabama brethren in Montgomery, continued to apply pressure in Tallahassee, and were eyeing prospective "victims" in Miami and St. Petersburg. Atlanta and Memphis were also seen as possible targets for the spreading boycott movement.

Latest developments on the boycott:

1. July 1 has been set as a deadline by the Cities Transit Company of Tallahassee, Fla., for settlement of the boycott "problem." If the boycott has not been settled by that date, the company says it intends to go out of business.

2. Some Miami Negro leaders say they are afraid to call a boycott because it might not prove as "effective" as the one in Tallahassee.

3. Montgomery boycott leaders had a mild rhubarb over funds when the Rev. U. J. Fields quit as secretary of the Montgomery Improvement Association charging misappropriation of funds but his claims were denied by Dr. Moses Jones who termed the charges "deeply regrettable." The MIA announced that it plans to iron out the dispute in private, but will keep a united front on the boycott issue.

4. In St. Petersburg, Fla., Negro leaders have called upon City Council to meet with them in an effort to prevent bus boycott or "similar incidents." The Rev. Enoch D. Davis of the Second Bethel Baptist Church said, "We are hopeful that St. Petersburg can assume a position of leadership."

5. Tallahassee's City Commission has granted the bus company permission to raise its fares from 10 to 15 cents in an effort to offset losses sustained through the boycott.

CORDELE, Ga.—After a white grocery clerk slapped a Negro woman home demonstration agent and broke her car door, Negroes of this community have waged an effective boycott of the store and warned that they would not immediately abandon their program.

6. The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the council sponsoring the Tallahassee boycott, has to leave town when he wants to visit his wife. She left the town because of threatening phone calls.

7. Sidney Rodney took a seat in the white section of a New Orleans bus and was charged with refusing to obey segregation laws and disturbing the peace. But, when Rodney turned up in court with Atty. A. P. Tureaud as counsel, the segregation and disturbing the peace charges were dismissed. Instead, he is being charged with being loud and boisterous.

8. The Montgomery Improvement Association has been incorporated as a non-profit organization to "improve living conditions in the community."

9. The Rev. Theodore Gibson, Miami NAACP chairman, asserts, "If they don't come across, we will call a boycott or go to the courts or both . . . if we call a boycott, it will be because we feel we can get quicker relief that way.

10. The Transport Union Workers of America's Executive Council, AFL-CIO, has called upon the bus drivers "of Montgomery, Ala., and any other city or town where a boycott or a campaign of passive resistance to the segregation edicts is being conducted to refuse to carry out bus owners' policies of segregation or discrimination."

11. Following the effects of the boycott in Montgomery, 10,000 whites of that Alabama town have joined the White Citizens Council.

Negroes' Bus Boycotts Continue in Two Cities

P. 29-A

By the Associated Press

Negro bus boycotts continued in two Southern cities today in the wake of a ruling by a three-judge Federal Court panel that racial segregaation one one of the bus lines waas unconstitutional.

A Negro spokesman said the boycott would go on in Montgomery, Alaa., at least until a formal court order was issued carrying out the decision. A boycott also was in progress at Tallahassee, Fla.

Representative Adam Clayton Powell, Democrat of New York, said 12 persons, "white and Negro from North and South," would meet in New York Saturday to consider whether the "time is ripe" for a nationwide program of passive resistance similar to the two bus boycotts.

Act to Exclude Negroes

The City Commission at Delray Beach, Fla., voted, 4 to 1, yesterday to take steps to have the entire Negro district excluded from the city limits of that resort town 47 miles north of Miami.

No violence has been reported in the city, but racial tension has mounted in the wake of attempts by Negroes to be allowed to use beaches and municipal swimming pools. The town has about 6,500 white persons and about 2,000 Negroes.

At Memphis, Tenn., the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed a Federal court suit asking that bus segregation laws in Tennessee be declared unconstitutional.

At Montgomery the 2-1 decision that racial segregation on city buses violated the Federal Constitution was handed down six months to the day after the start of the boycott.

Injunction Delayed

But the court took no immediate action to issue an injunction against enforcement of city and State segregation laws. The panel gave opposing lawyers two weeks to submit written suggestions on how the formal anti-segregation order should be made effective.

An appeal direct to the United Ssates Supreme Court might result in the first clear-cut decision by that court on city bus segregation.

At Tallahassee, where a bus boycott has been in progress since May 28, the Negro Inter-Civic Council scheduled a mass meeting for tonight to bring every one up to date on the situation.

The boycott was touched off when two students of Florida A&M University for Negroes at Tallahassee were arrested for refusing to move to the rear of a bus. A similar arrest of a Negro seamstress set off the Montgomery bus boycott. In both cities Negroes have been walking or using car pools to get to work, and in Tallahassee the bus company ended service on runs serving Negro communities.

About 500 Negroes at Birmingham, Ala., formed a new organization called the Alabama Christian Movement for human rights and dedicated to wiping out racial segregation. Formation of the new group followed granting of a temporary injunction at Montgomery last week outlawing the NAACP in Alabama.

Other developments on the segregation scene:

WASHINGTON.—Representative Huddleston, Democrat of Alabama, in a speech before the House, proposed a bill that would allow Federal and State courts to ignore any Supreme Court decision that "conflicts with the legal principal of adhering to prior decisions which are based upon considerations other than legal."

JOHNSON CITY, Tenn.—Four Negro students registered for summer classes in the white East Tennessee State College Graduate School after a ruling by the Tennessee Board of Education that Negroes could attend graduate school in State colleges.

PITTSBURGH.—The Rev. A. Henry Durham, pastor of the First Negro Methodist Church attempting to enter the all-white Pittsburgh Methodist Conference, said he has been relieved of his pastorate.

Mr. Durham said he was relieved because of his efforts over the last year to integrate his church into the white conference. This was denied by Mr. Durham's immediate superior.

The minister, pastor of the Buena Vista Church, declared Bishop Edgar A. Love of Baltimore, offered him a new charge in Winston-Salem, N. C., or a year's sabbatical leave. He said he is taking the leave. The Pittsburgh Methodist Conference (white) voted last May to invite all Negro churches in this area into its fold.

A Negro spokesman said the boycott would go on in Montgomery, Ala., at least until a formal court order was issued carrying out the decision. A boycott also was in progress at Tallahassee, Fla.

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D., N. Y.) said 12 persons, "white and Negro from North and South," would meet in New York Saturday to consider whether the "time is ripe" for a nationwide program of "passive resistance" similar to the two bus boycotts.

THE CITY commission at Delray Beach, Fla., voted 4-1 yesterday to take steps to have the entire Negro district excluded from the city limits of that resort town 47 miles north of Miami.

The commission asked legal counsel to draft a bill to the state Legislature to exclude the area and "to take all necessary and required steps incident to having the same enacted into law as soon as possible."

The Legislature, in extraordinary session now to consider only reapportionment, meets next in general session in April.

No violence has been reported in the city, but racial tension has mounted in the wake of attempts by Negroes to be allowed to use beaches and municipal swimming pools. The town has about 6500 white persons and about 2000 Negroes.

News

"I sincerely believe this is the only way we can save Delray Beach," said Mayor Mike Yargates. "To keep tourists coming down here we are forced to do something. Tourism is our whole livelihood."

AT MEMPHIS, Tenn., the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People filed a federal court suit asking that bus segregation laws in Tennessee be declared unconstitutional.

The suit requests that a three-judge court hold a "speedy hearing" and grant a temporary injunction restraining the city of Memphis and the Memphis Street Railway Co. from enforcing the Tennessee bus segregation laws.

Then, the suit asks, the court hold a second hearing and declare the state segregation laws null and void.

The president of the privately owned Memphis Street Railway Co., Roane Waring, said his company "can make no change in the manner of seating passengers on our buses. We must follow the state laws. The fact that we have had no trouble here over segregation is a tribute to the good citizenship and goodwill of both races."

The bus company present policy calls for Negroes to occupy seats from the rear forward, and whites from the front backward. There is no dividing line and Negroes do not have to surrender their seats to white riders.

OTHER DEVELOPMENTS on the segregation scene:

WASHINGTON—Atty. Gen. Brownell told the National Press Club that "the critical time has come for action" on the administration's civil rights program. "Members of the Negro race," he said, "need to be safeguarded from haters and opportunists, from those with sick minds."

At the capitol, Rep. Roosevelt (D., Calif.) filed a petition to take the civil rights bill out of the hands of the House rules committee and bring it up for a vote. To be effective, such a petition would require the signatures of 218 members of the House.

The bill has been approved by the House judiciary committee but has not got past the rules committee, which clears legislation for action. Many Southern members have opposed its progress.

ACTION IN LOUISIANA

P. 15

By The Associated Press

Southern pro-segregationists received some support yesterday from new legislative action in Louisiana while Miami, Fla., Negroes rejected the idea of a bus boycott similar to those in progress at Montgomery, Ala., and Tallahassee, Fla.

On the other hand, two Negro youths enrolled as undergraduates at the summer session of North Carolina State College.

Bill To Evade Order

At Baton Rouge, the Louisiana Senate approved, 37-0, a bill designed to help New Orleans evade a Federal Court order to integrate its public school system. The bill, which now goes to the House, in effect would require integration suits to be filed against the state, with a legislative act needed to file the suit.

At the same time, the Senate Education Committee unanimously approved four segregation measures which would permit firing of Louisiana teachers, school bus drivers and other school employes for advocating integrations. The measures previously passed the House.

In Richmond, the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals threw out a decision of Hanover Circuit Judge Leon M. Bazile that any expenditure from a Hanover County bond issue for non-segregated schools would be illegal because the referendum authorizing the bonds was held prior to the U. S. Supreme Court ruling outlawing segregation in public schools.

NAACP Spurns Plan

At Miami, local leaders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, turned down suggestions for a bus boycott and said that instead they would file suit in Federal Court challenging the constitutionality of Miami's bus segregation laws.

A resolution condemning bus boycotts as "untenable" was adopted at a mass meeting of about 400 Negroes, including NAACP leaders.

At Jacksonville, Florida's Democratic National Convention delegates rejected a request to endorse a movement for banding Southern states together on a platform drawn by the South Carolina delegation. The proposed platform said "the courts shall never be permitted to conduct the schools of the nation or to lay down standards of instruction or attendance thereof."

Two Raleigh, N. C., Negroes, Edward Carson and Manuel Houston Crockett Jr., enrolled as freshmen in electrical engineering at the summer session of North Carolina State College. They are the first to be admitted as undergraduates in the history of the college although graduates students have been enrolled for several years.

TALLAHASSEE PROTEST GROWS; SUIT IN TENN.

Daily World Wed. 6-6-56

Atlanta, Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — A three-judge federal court ruled segregation on Montgomery city buses unconstitutional Tuesday, and Alabama officials announced an immediate appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The decision was hailed as "a victory for Democracy and justice" by the Rev. M. L. King, leader of the six-month protest which has kept virtually all of Montgomery's 50,000 Negroes off city buses.

The Rev. King said, however, that the "protest will continue" while the court decides whether to make its ruling effective immediately, or await appeal to the high court.

TALLAHASSEE PICTURE

A boycott of local buses in Tallahassee, Fla., meanwhile, continued to gain supporters Tuesday and in Memphis, Tenn., a Negro asked to leave a bus when he refused to move to the rear of the vehicle filed suit attacking that

O. Z. Evers, with legal aid from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, asked for a three-judge court in Memphis and "speedy" hearing to stop the Memphis Street Railway Co., and the city from enforcing racial segregation.

20-PAGE DECISION

In the 20-page Montgomery decision, two of the three Federal judges held enforced segregation violates the due process and equal protection clauses of the U. S. Constitution. The court invited views on the form its final decree should take, and on whether desegregation should be ordered immediately. The legal briefs are due in two weeks.

Alabama officials said they would appeal the ruling and ask that its effectiveness be postponed, predicting "racial conflict" if the color bars were let down immediately.

APPEAL PLANNED

C. C. Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, said the ruling would be "immediately appealed." He said the court would be urged to delay making the decision effective, pending the appeal, because:

"Any other action would invite racial conflict in this state."

The court, in holding enforced segregation violates the due process and equal protection clauses of the Federal Constitution, invited Negroes who brought the action, and the city, state and bus lines to submit within two weeks "views as to the form of judgment to be entered, and whether such judgment should be stayed pending appeal."

COMPLETE AGREEMENT

The majority opinion said the judges were in "complete agreement" with the verdict of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which held that segregation on buses in South Carolina was violative of constitutional provisions. That case is due for another round in the courts, after the U. S. Supreme Court referred it for further proceedings, without specifically ruling on the question of segregation in public transit systems.

The Montgomery Bus Lines had ordered an end to segregation on its buses when the Supreme Court action in the South Carolina case was held in some quarters to have outlawed segregation in buses. But it was only a gesture. City officials threatened arrest of anyone violating the segregation laws which the court struck down Tuesday. And Negroes continued a boycott against the buses which began months before when a woman passenger was arrested for refusing to move to the rear of the vehicle.

SIMILAR BOYCOTT

A similar boycott of public buses got underway in Tallahassee, Fla., last week, with Negro patrons demanding an end to segregation, more courteous treatment from drivers and Negro drivers on routes predominantly patronized by Negroes. These demands were identical with those made by boycott leaders in Montgomery.

Daily World

The Alabama Public Service Commission termed Tuesday's dissenting opinion by Judge Lynn "great and learned." Judge Lynn reaffirmed the long-standing "separate but equal" legal doctrine--which was upset by the U. S. Supreme Court in the school segregation cases.

P. 4

"The majority opinion," Owen said, "seeks to overturn the separate-but-equal doctrine...which has been consistently followed since 1849."

Atlanta 6-56

MOTOR BUSES

The 20-page decision refers specifically to "motor buses"....in the city of Montgomery and its police jurisdiction, apparently making it necessary for separate legal actions to make the effect of the decision applicable in other jurisdictions.

Until the Supreme Court's school segregation decision, rulings of the high court generally were accepted as legal precedent, and applicable in any similar set of circumstances. The South generally, however, has refused to accept the school ruling as applying anywhere but in the specific areas where the action was brought, making suits in each school district in the deep South region necessary before the ruling could effectively erase the traditional color line.

GENERAL

Segregation On Trains, In Depots Due To End Tues, Jan 10th

Informer Houston, Tex

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA) — A search of the Interstate Commerce Commission files in the two cases in which railroads and buses were ordered to end racial segregation of interstate passengers failed to reveal that notices of compliance had yet been filed up to Friday.

Sat 1-14-56

The railroads were due to comply with the order by January 10, and at least two railroads operating in the South had indicated their intention to comply by the deadline.

These roads were the Southern Railway and the Richmond, Fredricksburg and Potomac Railroad.

Twelve railroads, a rail terminal company and a bus line were affected by the ICC order to ease and- desist from maintaining and requiring the use of segregated accommodations in railway coaches, trains and station waiting rooms by colored interstate passengers.

The Baltimore and Ohio, which operates in Maryland and West Virginia but was not one of the defendants in the two cases, said it had no problem because segregated facilities over its line had long been abolished.

The Chesapeake and Ohio, which operates in Kentucky and Virginia but also was not a defendant, said it did not have much of a problem as it carries no segregated coaches.

Compliance with the order by abolishing segregated waiting rooms and complying with state laws requiring segregation was under discussion, a spokesman said.

The Southern Railway, which operates between Washington and the Deep South, said signs on its waiting rooms would come down as far as interstate travelers were concerned, but segregation laws in the southern states in which it operates would have to be obeyed so far as interstate passengers were concerned.

Obviously, this means that the Southern plan to follow a practice of nonsegregation as to waiting rooms for interstate passengers but would still maintain white and colored waiting rooms for passengers whose travel begins and ends within a state.

The Southern said segregation on its trains already had been effectively abolished.

W. Thomas Rice, president of the R.F. & P., said segregation signs would come down on its waiting rooms between Washington and Richmond. He said his line had no problem concerning intrastate and interstate passengers.

Informer

Mr. Rice said, however, that his railroad could take no action with respect to space leased to the Union News Company in the Board Street Station in Richmond. The Union News Company operates segregated public lunch rooms in the station. The Board Street Station is operated by the Richmond Terminal, a corporation jointly controlled by the R. F. & P. and the Atlantic Coast line.

The ICC dismissed the complaint against the Union News Company on the ground that it had no authority over the lunch room.

It could not be ascertained here Friday what the Texas and Pacific railroad intends to do. The complaint against it also was dismissed because the record contained no evidence relating to its practices with respect to interstate passengers.

The other railroads affected by the order, whose intentions also are unknown, are: The St Louis-San Francisco Railway Co., the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Co., the Atlantic Coast Line, Seaboard Air Line, Missouri Pacific Railroad Co., Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, Gulf Colorado and Santa Fe, and the Panhandle and Santa Fe.

Also under orders to cease segregation on its buses is the Carolina Coach Company.

Jim Crow Waiting Room Signs

Informer P. 12

If any graphic and visible evidence of the era of desegregation is needed, one place to look for it will be in the waiting rooms of railroad and bus stations. There the "white" and "colored" signs began to come down, even before the deadline of January 10th set by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Houston, Tex

Strange, however, are the ways of the prosegregationists. In Greensboro, North Carolina, for instance, the Southern Railway has removed the "colored" and "white" signs over the waiting room doors. Where the "white" sign was formerly they have put the sign "Waiting Room." But, where the "colored" sign was, they have a new sign which reads: "Colored Intrastate Waiting Room."

The implication of this necessarily is that there will be no white intrastate passengers, and that only Negroes will travel within the state. In other words, they are trying to make the state law read that only Negroes traveling intrastate have to be segregated. This would leave the white and Negro interstate passengers and the white intrastate passengers in the same waiting room, without segregation.

Sat 1-14-56

Of course, what they are tring to get around is the building of a new waiting room for white passengers traveling within the state. But the truth of the matter is that it is not likely to be long before segregation of any passengers will be finally held to be unconstitutional. The Columbia, South Carolina, city bus segregation case is now in the Supreme Court of the United States.

In the meantime, the signs in the Greensboro railway stations show to what lengths the prosegregationists will go before bowing to the law of the land.

Bus Segregation Was Not Outlawed Monday

Advertiser P. 4-B Mon. Jan. 30, 56

The press in general slipped badly in reporting the action of the Supreme Court in the South Carolina bus case. The Court's terse dismissal of an appeal in this case was widely interpreted by newspapers, including this one, as ending segregation in intrastate transportation. Some reporters eloquently portrayed the Court as embalming the last remains of the separate-but-equal doctrine of Plessy vs. Ferguson. Misled by these sweeping statements, many editors played the story on their front pages as one of the most significant news events of the day. Actually, the Supreme Court had done nothing more than to dismiss an appeal which had been improperly brought.

Thus The Washington Post confirms, as we suggested earlier in the week, that the nation's press was guilty of conclusion-jumping and National City Lines of unseemly haste in assuming the Supreme Court had outlawed segregation in intrastate transportation. The Post, in thorough fashion, describes how the error was perpetrated.

The court's per curiam order said only: "The appeal is dismissed. Slaker vs. O'Conner, 278 U.S. 188."

Looking up the 1929 decision cited, reporters picked out such words as "frivolous" and "needlessly consumed our time" and jumped to the conclusion that the court was saying the present appeal was frivolous, thus confirming the Court of Appeals' findings, including the opinion that the doctrine of separate-but-equal is no longer valid.

The significant holding in Slaker vs. O'Connor was dismissal of an appeal because the decree of the lower court was not final. In the South Carolina bus case, the question of damages was still to be decided. Thus the dismissal, The Post now concludes, was "entirely procedural" and not, as is sometimes the case, an affirmation of the lower court's decree.

There are many reasons why the court may refuse to review a case and seasoned reporters should have known this. But The Post concludes, as The Advertiser said Thursday, that the Supreme Court is partly to blame for the national confusion and excitement at such a critical time:

> . . . The court might well ask itself if it is doing all it can to prevent misunderstanding of its decisions. The court has an interest in having its rulings properly understood. A few clarifying words in its order in the South Carolina bus case would have saved the press from its error. Without minimizing the responsibility of the press for accurate reporting, the court might well remember the speed with which news stories are customarily written and give some brief warning of pitfalls into which laymen trying to understand its work may otherwise fall.

We trust National City Lines, which is now very far out on a sagging limb, will remember this lesson.

Jim Crow signs down at depots

BULLETIN

In only two states in the Deep South is there absolute defiance of the Interstate Commerce Commission's order that passengers in interstate travel may not be segregated in carriers and waiting rooms. These rebel states are Louisiana and Mississippi.

38 lines

BALTIMORE

The Interstate Commerce Commission ordered an end to segregated waiting rooms for interstate passengers — those traveling between states — as of Jan. 10, 1956. The order does not apply to intrastate passengers — those traveling within a state.

General

While most of the southern states are complying with the order in varying degrees, depots and terminals are confusing travelers in some states by converting their formerly colored waiting rooms to waiting rooms for "intrastate" passengers and are thus maintaining traditional segregation in their localities.

The AFRO sent more than a score of its correspondents in southern cities to train and bus stations within their localities to see how the common carriers were complying with the order of the ICC.

ALABAMA

BIRMINGHAM — Jim Crow signs were removed at the passenger terminal of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad here, but separate facilities continued to be provided and the company's spokesmen indicated that they would depend upon local police to enforce state segregation laws.

Signs were up at the Greyhound and Trailways bus stations after Jan. 10.

FLORIDA

TALLAHASSEE — The Seaboard Airline Railroad took down the white sign over the door over its main waiting room and changed the sign over the former colored waiting room to read: "Colored Intrastate."

There was no change in "white" and "colored" signs at the airport or at either of the city's two bus stations.

GEORGIA

ATLANTA — The Southern Railway System, biggest user of the Atlanta Terminal, pulled down its JC signs and colored passengers immediately began using the main waiting room.

Airport and bus terminal spokesmen said that segregation always had been "informal" at those places and was to continue on that basis.

AUGUSTA—Signs at the Union Station here came down on Jan. 10. On the street side approach they were obliterated by removing black paint, but inside the waiting room, signs indicating the four rest rooms were intact.

At Trailways and Greyhound bus terminals authorities reported that no action has been taken.

LOUISIANA

BATON ROUGE — Gov. Robert F. Kennon ordered all state, parish and municipal officers in this state to continue rigid enforcement of the state law requiring separate facilities for the races at all stations.

He said that the ICC's order directly violates a Supreme Court opinion in an 1833 civil rights case to the effect that the regulation of facilities for public conveyance was reserved to the states under the 10th Amendment.

MISSISSIPPI

JACKSON — Police stood by to enforce segregation measures at the Illinois Central Railway Station here.

LAUREL — Mayor A. S. Scott said segregation will continue in this city. If the carriers remove signs at train and bus stations here, he said, the city will erect new ones.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson said that it is a misdemeanor to violate the state's segregation laws, punishable by fines of $100 to $1,000.

NORTH CAROLINA

ASHEVILLE — The Southern Railroad has removed "colored waiting room" signs and replaced them with "waiting room" signs at its passenger terminal here.

Separate waiting rooms, rest rooms and eating facilities at the Union Bus Station remained although bus lines have complied with the ICC order.

DURHAM — Here the white only sign at the Seaboard Station was painted out and over the colored waiting room sign there has been erected a second ign which reads "colored intrastate passengers waiting room."

GOLDSBORO — Segregation signs were still up here as of Jan. 12.

LUMBERTON — Jim Crow signs are still up at the Queen City Trailway Bus Station, the Seaboard Airline Station and the City Bus Station owned by Paul Britt.

RALEIGH — The Seaboard and Southern railway stations here had not removed their JC signs as of Jan. 10 and colored passengers are still forced to eat at the same "dirty, little" lunch counter at the Seaboard Station.

WILMINGTON—The Seaboard Airlines is using the same system here that it employed in Durham, while the Atlantic Coast Line depot is fully complying with the ICC order.

The Union Bus Terminal and Bluethenthal Airport have reported no changes in their waiting room operations.

SOUTH CAROLINA

COLUMBIA — Waiting rooms at the Union Railway Station formerly reserved for white travelers now only show signs saying "waiting room." The waiting rooms for colored passengers have signs reading "colored intrastate passengers."

SPARTANBURG — The Seaboard Airlines Station here has complied with the ICC order, but the bus terminals remain segregated.

TENNESSEE

CHATTANOOGA — The Nashville, Chatanooga and St. Louis Station is the only one here which has fully complied with the ICC order. The Southern has changed its signs, but replaced the old "colored waiting room" sign with one reading "colored intrastate passengers waiting room."

Neither of the bus companies (the Trailway and Greyhound) has removed any signs and their managers have not indicated whether they will comply or not with the order.

NASHVILLE — Railway and bus stations here have discarded segregation of passengers without incident.

TEXAS

HOUSTON — The two bus terminals and railway stations here were not complying with the ICC order last week. However, at Union RR Station the entrance used by colored people had a sign up "closed," and racial signs were removed prior to Jan. 10.

VIRGINIA

CHARLOTTESVILLE — at the C and O Station Jim Crow signs are still up, although the C and O has not had any segregation on its trains for some time.

At the Union Station, which serves the C and O and Southern Systems, the white has been painted over on the waiting room formerly reserved for white persons and the sign on the other waiting room altered to read "colored intrastate passengers."

NEWPORT NEWS — The C and O Railroad Station and the Greyhound Bus Station still use "white" and "colored" signs. The ticket agent at the bus station said he knew of no plan to remove the signs.

At the Broad St. Station all "white" and "colored" signs have been removed. All passengers using this station are presumed to be interstate passengers, officials said.

National Lines to recognize segregation rule

Tues. 4-24-56

CHICAGO, April 24—(AP)—National City Lines, Inc., which operates city bus lines in several Southern states, made known today that it will not "enforce segregation" on the buses.

The policy was made public one day after the U. S. Supreme Court held bus segregation unconstitutional.

Birmingham, Ala.

B. W. Franklin, vice president of National City Lines, told the Associated Press:

"We're not going to enforce segregation."

General

The Supreme Court's decision was in a case that originated in South Carolina.

Franklin told a newsman there are segregation statutes in all Southern states and some city ordinances also provide for separation of white and Negro passengers.

"To the best of our knowledge, the Supreme Court declared the South Carolina statute unconstitutional," he said.

He said the statutes in the other Southern states were similar.

"This company has no choice but to comply with the decision of the Supreme Court. For that reason we are not going to attempt to enforce segregation laws.

Franklin did not predict the effect of the company's policy. But he said he understood the mayor of Mobile, Ala., had asked for segregation on a voluntary basis.

Montgomery Will Enforce Segregation

38b
General

Bus lines in at least 13 Southern cities abolished segregated seating Tuesday but the orepators were threatened with prosecution in Montgomery, embittered over a 20-week bus boycott by Negroes.

The City and the State of Alabama declared their own segregation laws still in effect although the Supreme Court Monday apparently outlawed the last racial separation barriers in public transportation.

Attorney generals ask Congress to guard state laws. Story on Page 2.

INTEGRATION STEPS

But other bus firms began following the integration policies of the National City Lines, which operates in eight Southern and "border" cities where segregation has traditionally been practiced, including Montgomery.

The Virginia Transit Co. said enforced segregation would be discontinued Wednesday on its lines in Richmond and Norfolk and "it is hoped. . .that good judgment will be used by all passengers in order to continue to maintain good relations."

A spokesman for the Virginia company said the Portsmouth, Va., Transit Co. also would adopt the new policy. Operators were being instructed tonight in Richmond and Norfolk to discontinue enforcing the state segregated seating law.

DURHAM LINE

In North Carolina, the Duke Power Co. said it also was complying with the Supreme Court principle but did not expect any great change in its bus operations at Durham and Greensboro. A spokesman said no reaction or opposition was expected by city officials at either place.

The National City Lines, with headquarters in Chicago, operates subsidiaries in Jackson, Miss.; Tampa, Fla.; Mobile, Ala.; Tulsa, Okla.; Montgomery, and Wichita Falls, Beaumont and El Paso, Tex., where segregation has been practiced.

Constitution

No immediate mixed riding appeared in prospect, however, in most of the Deep South cities. At El Paso, however, the bus company said it had only a few Negro passengers and anticipated no trouble when the signs denoting the white and colored sections are removed.

TULSA SHIFT

Tulsa bus riders have practiced segregation informally but the company said a changeover was expected without incident there. The company also has buses in St. Louis and East St. Louis, Ill., where segregation has never been practiced.

38b

The transit authority of Nashville, Tenn., announced an emergency meeting would be held Tuesday night to consider local effects of the court's decision.

General

Chairman Justin Potter said he had no desire to "stall, delay or evade" the issue of segregation.

Tampa, Fla., continued its traditional segregation pattern on buses Tuesday.

NCL VIEW

A National City Lines official in Chicago said the company will 'not e'nforce segregation." But C. J. Helbing, Tampa manager of the transit lines, said the situation will be handled just as always.

Helbing said signs in the buses which direct Negro passengers to seat from the rear "will remain in buses until we are instructed by the state or my company to remove them."

In Montgomery, organized Negroes who have boycotted buses four months said no action to end the boycott would be taken until Thursday, when a meeting will be held.

Montgomery officials threatened arrest of bus line officers and employes or passengers involved in racial mixing on buses. A local ordinance provides up to six months in jail for violation.

Two of the three members of the Mobile, Ala., City Commission said the city's bus segregation will be enforced as long as it remains on the city books.

Mobile Mayor Joseph N. Langan said, however, he believes the Supreme Court decision invalidates Mobile's bus segregation law.

The Supreme Court's decision ruling out segregation in buses immediately was injected into the red-hot Florida gubernatorial contest.

Gov. LeRoy Collins promised Tuesday that lawful steps will be take nto avoid desegregation of intrastate buses.

Candidate Fuller Warren said the court's decision "proves that the present governor's statements that he has prevented mixing of races in Florida was just a lot of propaganda."

In Little Rock, Ark., the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People announced it will seek immediate end of racial segregation on the city's buses.

The spokesman said the first step would be a request, but he declined to elaborate further.

Bus company officials in Baton Rouge and Shreveport, La., said no change in the segregated seating pattern is contemplated in those cities.

Officials in Alexandria, La., and Gulfport, Jackson and Meridian, Miss., also indicated that the court's ruling will not end segregation on buses in their cities.

Meanwhile, in Georgia, the Supreme Court's sweeping decision had no effect on public transit operations.

State, city and transportation officials were quick to point out that the ruling was on a South Carolina appeal, to which Georgia was not a party.

Gov. Griffin pledged resistance at all odds.

No efforts to break down bus segregation were reported in any Georgia city.

Operators of highway buses were non-commital on what course they will follow.

Mayor Hugh Hamilton of Augusta and Macon Mayor B. F. Merritt said they have no authority to order any change.

L. D. Baggs Jr., president of the Bibb Transit So. that serves Macon, said "I have not ordered any changes."

L. H. Costa, president of the locally owned Columbus Transportation Co., said that no change in the firm's seating policy is contemplated. "We will continue operating just as in the past," he sadi.

At Savannah, Hadley B. Commack, general manager of the transit company there, said "Our position is the same as everybody else's. We think it's an invasion of states' rights and we're not sure whether the court's ruling will stick or not."

Defender Sat. 6-30-56 P. 3

NEW YORK — Bus drivers in Montgomery, Ala., Tallahassee, Fla., and any other city where an anti-segregation boycott is being conducted have been called upon to refuse to carry out bus owners' policies of segregation or discrimination.

Chicago, Ill.

Resistance to bus segregation was urged by the international executive council of the Transport Workers union of America, AFL-CIO.

The council, in executive session, passed a resolution calling for this action by bus operators.

The resolution, passed at a session in New York's Park-Sheraton hotel, also blasted the white citizens councils and commended the courage, determination and maturity of the Negro people of Montgomery in the fight against bus discrimination.

The resolution said, in part:

"The Transport Workers union . . .hails this genuine progress toward the achievement of full and unqualified citizenship. . .It is with deep concern and anxiety that we view the efforts now being made to subvert this progress and to deny in practice what the country's highest court has substantiated to be the rights. . .under the Constitution.

"The White citizens' councils mushrooming from the hatebeds of the South, are spreading their racist poisons through an alarming large number of our states. By economic intimidation and the encouragement of mob-violence and murder, the white citizens' counctactics of the hooded massacre cils have revived the cowardly and the desecration of the burning cross.

"Their end is to crush not only the organizations of the Negro people but to wipe out all groups, and patrticularly the trade unions in the South which are fighting for justice and equality for all minorities.

"This international executive council of the Transport Workers union of America, AFL-CIO, condemns the white citizens councils as a menace to all America and a blight upon our national life.

"We commend the courage and militancy of the Negro communities in standing firm against all matter of terror and intimidation. We hail their vigorous and unflinching insistence upon long overdue justice. We admire the conduct of the Negro people of Montgomery, Ala., under the leadership of Rev. Martin Luther King, who have manifested to all the world a rare courage, determination and maturity in their fight to end segregation. By their action they have struck a blow for freedom for all minorities in the U. S., and have earned the support of all Americans devoted to decency in our national life.

"We call upon the bus drivers of Montgomery and any other city or town where a boycott or a campaign of passive resistance to the segregation edicts is being conducted, to join with the forces of decency and progress in their communities and to refuse to carry out policies of segregation or racial discrimination in the performance of their daily duties."

Officials of the Montgomery City Lines, Inc., ordered an end to segregation on buses Tuesday in Montgomery, Ala., where Negroes have boycotted the buses in protest over segregation for nearly five months.

But there was no mixing of the races on the buses in Montgomery and no immediate indication when the boycott would end.

At Mobile, Ala., an official of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said the group plans no immediate action on that city's plans to continue bus segregation.

John L. Leflore, executive secretary of the Mobile NAACP, said he would consult the association's legal staff in New York before deciding what steps, if any, would be taken.

Asks Voluntary Segregation

Two city commissioners said Mobile's city ordinance requiring separation of white and Negro passengers will be enforced. The third commissioner said he felt the Supreme Court's ruling invalidated the ordinance.

South Reaction Uncertain On Bus Desegregation

Star Wed. 4-25-56 P. 6-A

Washington, D.C.

By the Associated Press

Segregated seating was abolished by bus companies in some Southern cities today, just two days after the United States Supreme Court banned racial segregation on public transportation within the borders of a State.

But there was no clear indication how the change in the traditional Southern pattern of separating the races on buses and trolleys would work out in the face of numerous State laws prohibiting integration.

The Virginia Transit Co. announced it would discontinue segregation on its lines in Richmond and Norfolk today and said the Portsmouth Transit Co. also would adopt the new policy.

A few Virginia Transit Co. bus drivers permitted mixing of the races yesterday. No incidents were reported.

In North Carolina the Duke Power Co. said it also was complying with the Supreme Court decision, but did not expect any great change in its bus operations at Durham and Greensboro.

No immediate mixed riding appeared in prospect in most cities of the Deep South. However, generally speaking, white and Negro passengers continued to seat from the front and from the back as they had in the past.

To Resist Ruling

Officials in many States pledged to continue to do everything possible to keep the races apart.

Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia said he would resist the ruling in every legal way and Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi said, "We will hold the line on segregation without fail but will not keep ourselves in a daily uproar over it."

Several Louisiana and Mississippi officials said segregated buses would be continued despite the Supreme Court ruling.

But in Florida, J. B. Osteen, traffic manager of Florida Greyhound Lines, said his company would obey the new court order as soon as interpretation and procedure have been worked out. A spokesman for the Florida Trailways Bus System said, however, that his company would operate under Florida law which calls for segregation on buses within the State.

At Little Rock, Ark., Frank W. Smith, State executive secretary for the NAACP, said his organization would seek an immediate end to racial segregation on Little Rock buses. David Durbin, vice president of the Citizens Coach Co., declared that transit company attorneys would not advise a company policy until they had studied the decision thoroughly.

BUSES MIX RACES IN PARTS OF SOUTH

Times P.27-C

But in the Main Negroes Still Face Resistance to End of Segregation

Thurs. 4-26-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 25 (UP)—Negroes sat freely with white on buses in some Southern cities today, but the same hard core of resistance that has delayed school integration kept the races separated in many others.

Generally, compliance with the new Supreme Court action foretelling the end of legal segregation in transportation, fell into what is becoming a familiar Southern pattern.

Some cities in Virginia, North Carolina and eastern Tennessee, where faint beginnings have been made in integrated education, put up no barriers against first-come, first-served seating. But in most of them, Negroes continued to take seats toward the rear.

The unyielding segregation stand was found in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi although bus lines serving some cities instructed drivers not to enforce segregation further.

In Montgomery, both state and city have threatened to prosecute the bus company, drivers and passengers white or black who try to bring about indiscriminate seating. The feeling persisted despite a twenty-week boycott by Negroes of the segregated buses which has bitten deeply into the economy of the city.

Florida and Louisiana lately have taken position in the bank of unyielding Southeastern states. No change-over to integrated buses or schools was detected in Florida. All candidates for Governor in a heated campaign have trumpeted continued segregation.

Louisiana, which has made a start toward integration of graduate and parochial schools, was operating under the state segregation law on the question of public transportation.

Actually, the Supreme Court's terse refusal to interfere with a ruling against segregation in a South Carolina case last Monday did not constitute an immediate order for mixed seating everywhere. Attorneys in Washington said it left considerable room for legal maneuvering and a number of Southern areas were taking advantage of it.

Bus lines in Charleston and Columbia, S. C., are operated by the South Carolina Electric and Gas Company, against which the suit that reached the Supreme Court was filed. The utility has not issued a formal statement of its intentions and the state insists its own segregation law still prevails.

Some Negroes sat in the front with whites in Richmond and Norfolk, Va., today. The Virginia Transit Company formally ended segregated seating today and called for passenger cooperation.

Bus Companies in 13 Cities Of South End Segregation

Times Wed. 4-25-56

By The United Press.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 24—Bus line operators ended segregation today in at least thirteen cities, including this Deep South stronghold where Negroes have boycotted the buses for twenty weeks. Montgomery bus operators immediately were threatened with prosecution.

Both the city and the state of Alabama declared that their own segregation laws still in effect.

The desegration activity followed a ruling by the United States Supreme Court yesterday in a South Carolina bus case. The Court's ruling is expected to remove eventually the color restrictions on intrastate transit lines in the South.

Other bus firms began to follow the integration policies of the National City Lines, which operates in eight southern or "border" cities where segregation has traditionally been practiced, including Montgomery.

The Virginia Transit Company said that enforced segregation would be discontinued tomorrow on its lines in Richmond and Norfolk. "It is hoped * * * that good judgment will be used by all passengers in order to continue to maintain good relations," the line said.

A spokesman for the Virginia company said that the Portsmouth, Va., Transit Company also would adopt the new policy. Operators were being instructed tonight in Richmond and Norfolk to discontinue enforcing the state segregated seating law.

In North Carolina, the Duke Power Company said that it also was integrating but did not expect any great change in its bus operations at Durham and Greensboro. A spokesman said no reaction or opposition was expected by city officials at either place.

The National City Lines, with headquarters in Chicago, operates subsidiaries in Jackson, Miss.; Tampa, Fla.; Mobile Ala.; Tulso, Okla.; Montgomery, and Wichita Falls, Beumont and El Paso, Tex., where segregation has been practiced.

No immediate mixed riding appeared in prospect, however, in most of the cities in the deep South. At El Paso, however, the bus company said it had only a few Negro passengers and anticipated no trouble when the signs denoting the white and colored sections were removed.

Tulsa bus drivers have practiced segregation informally but the company said a changeover was expected without incident there. The company also has buses in St. Louis and East St. Louis, Ill., where segregation has never been practiced.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, April 24—Georgia's laws requiring segregation on instrastate buses remain in effect and the state will oppose any desegregation move "by all possible legal means," Gov. Marvin Griffin declared today.

Mr. Griffin said that the United States Supreme Court decision on a bus segregation case in a South Carolina case did not apply to Georgia because Georgia was not a party in the action.

Meanwhile, bus company executives in the state reported that they had not heard of any incidents since the South Carolina decision was announced yesterday.

Bus companies generally were abiding by the state's segregation laws until they could read for themselves the South Carolina segregation decision in detail and determine how it would affect Georgia operators.

Robert L. Sommerville, president of the Atlanta Transit System, said that between 30 and 40 per cent of the system's business was furnished by Negroes and that a policy of segregation was being maintained.

Boycott Continues

Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 24—Racial barriers on Montgomery buses were removed today but leaders of both races stood firm on their goals.

The Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., spokesman for the Negroes who have been boycotting the city's buses since last Dec. 5, said "there will be no immediate change in our position." He said the boycott would continue.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said that bus drivers who permitted desegregation on their buses would be prosecuted. He added that any passenger who mixes with the opposite on buses would face arrest.

Dr. King issued his statements after a meeting of the board of directors of the Montgomery Improvement Association, the group that directs the boycott.

"Two of our original three proposals have apparently been met," he said, "but we are awaiting word on the third—employment of Negro bus drivers for predominantly Negro routes."

The other proposals presented to the City Commission by his group were for a first-come, first-served policy of seating on buses and for greater courtesy to Negro passengers.

KEY TO CLEAR-CUT DECISION

3-Judge Panel To Hear Segregation Challenge Here

By REX THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

The lengthening Negro boycott of city buses in Montgomery may produce the first clear-cut decision from the Supreme Court on bus segregation.

A suit challenging constitutionality of Montgomery city and Alabama state segregation laws will be heard by three-judge panel in federal court here Friday.

The complaint, bearing the names of six Negroes and filed as an outgrowth of the mass boycott now in its sixth month, seeks a declaratory judgement holding the anti-race mixing laws invalid, and an injunction to stop the city and state from enforcing them.

Montgomery City Lines Inc., a privaely owned carrier which operates the city's only bus service, has already abandoned segregation for its part. Its drivers have been ordered to refrain from separating white and Negro passengers.

But there have been no reports of actual integration because most Negroes are still boycotting the bus line in protest against hreas city commissioners. Negroes who have continued to patronize the buses have kept to the rear seats where they always sat.

The City of Montgomery has asked Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones in circuit court for an injunction to compel the bus company to rescind the integration order. Jones may announce his ruling this week.

City attorneys contended at a hearing last Thursday that the continued exisence of the non-segregaion policy has created serious Commissioner Clyde Sellers testified that in his opinion a breakdown in segregation would invite rioting and would make it "dangerous for people to walk the streets."

If the three-judge federal panel sitting here Friday takes juridcictiion and rules on the legality of the segregation laws as requested, the outcome either way is certain to be appealed direct to the Suprme Cour.

City and state attorneys have questioned the panel's jurisdiction, arguing that the Aorney General's office, alhough made a defendant, doesn't exercise jurisdiction over city buses in Montgomery.

A three-judge panel is chosen to test constitutionality of state laws when stae officials enforce hem.

The Negroes contend the panel does have jurisdicion and are asking for an injunction to prevent either the city or state from enforcing bus segregation laws in Montgomery.

If the panel's decision goes direct to the Supreme Court, it probably will get there ahead of the case from South Carolina on which the high court acted April 23, since that case must be tried again on a question of damages.

The ruling two weeks ago was first interpreted as a decision outlawing bus segregation. But some attorneys have contended since then that the Supreme Court dismissed an appeal only because the case was still pending in the lower court.

It began as a calim for damages by a Negro woman forced to give up her seat on a bus in Columbia, S.C. A judge in U.S. District Court dismissed it; the fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed him, holding the segregation laws invalid, and sent the case back for trial.

The South arolina Electric & Gas Co. appealed otthe Supreme Court and the appeal was dismissed.

Lawyers are divided over the effect of the Supreme Court's order. Attorneys for Montgomery City Lines argued last Thursday that the decision merely sent the South Carolina case back for trial and wasn't a ruling on segregation itself.

There is no issue of damages in the case pending here. If the panel rules Alabama city and state segregation laws unconstitutional, for example, the next step would be an appeal to the Supreme Cour for the decision here to be upheld or reversed.

The South Carolina case hasn't been set for trial in distric court, so the issue here may reach the Supreme Court first.

Court's handling caused bus ruling confusion

BY JAMES MARLOW,
Associated Press news analyst

WASHINGTON, April 26—(AP)—There has been confusion this week—but it's hard to see why—on the Supreme Court's action on racial segregation in buses which operate entirely within a state.

Ten years ago the court banned segregation on interstate buses—those which cross state lines—but never had ruled on whether segregation on intrastate buses also was unconstitutional. It faced that question this week.

THE COURT'S ACTION—or the manner in which it acted—was widely interpreted as meaning segregation on intrastate buses is unlawful. Almost at once buslines in 13 Southern cities ended segregation.

Then some lawyers who never have been named were reported as saying this kind of interpretation was going too far, that the court hadn't actually said segregation on intrastate buses was unlawful.

True, the court didn't say that in so many words. But if the English language has any meaning the court in effect ruled that segregation on intrastate buses must end. Some of the confusion is due to the way the court handled the case.

For reasons of its own, the court—ever since ruling May 17, 1954, against public school segregation—has given no reasoned opinions in its subsequent decisions outlawing segregation in other fields, such as public parks. It has simply issued legal orders.

THIS IS the background:

South Carolina, by law, has compelled bus companies operating within the state to make Negroes ride behind white passengers. The buses in Columbia, S. C., are run by the South Carolina Electric & Gas Co.

On June 22, 1954—just a little over a month after the Supreme Court had banned public school segregation—a Negro woman, Sarah Mae Flemming, boarded a crowded, segregated bus in Columbia. Negroes were standing.

When a white passenger got up, Sarah Flemming sat down. This put her in front of two white passengers. The bus driver ordered her out of there. She charged later she not only had to leave the seat but that the driver hit her.

She sued the company in Federal District Court for $25,000 damages, claiming her constitutional rights to equal treatment had been violated.

THE CASE WENT before U. S. Judge George Bell Timmerman. The company asked him to dismiss the suit. There was no trial for damages. The case didn't get that far.

The judge said: Was the segregation law unconstitutional? If not, the woman had no case in his court. He ruled bus segregation was constitutional. The women took her case to the U. S. Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va.

It was this same court which had ruled—and been upheld by the Supreme Court last November—that state laws compelling segregation in public parks were unconstitutional.

The appeals court did the same in this case: It said Judge Timmerman was wrong, that intrastate bus segregation is unconstitutional. It told Timmerman to reverse his ruling, and did so with this language: "The case will be remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent herewith."

THAT MEANT the woman's suit for damages would now have to go to trial in Timmerman's court and Timmerman should tell the jury the bus segregation law of South Carolina is unconstitutional.

The utility company, fighting this ruling, appealed to the Supreme Court. That court dismissed the appeal, sending the case back to Timmerman.

The Supreme Court, in sending the case back, let the Court of Appeals instructions to Timmerman stand unchanged. It had this appeal under consideration for weeks, and could have said something against the Appeals Court ruling, but it didn't.

Now if the woman wins damages, or if the company wins, this case may come back to the Supreme Court several years from now. The Supreme Court then may say more on the subject than it did now.

But since Timmerman is under instructions to tell the jury the Carolina law is unconstitutional, the Supreme Court would be in a strange position if at some later date it ruled it had thought all along the Carolina segregation law was constitutional.

'Sit Anywhere', Riders Told

From AFRO Correspondents

Bowing immediately to the mandate of the U.S. Supreme Court, bus companies in almost a score of southern cities desegregated their intrastate buses this week.

Among those cities are Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston, San Antonio, El Paso and Beaumont, Texas; Richmond, Norfolk and Portsmouth, Va.; Tulsa, Okla.; Louisville, Ky.; Witchita Falls, Kan.; Knoxville, Tenn.; and Durham and Greensboro, N.C.

Although integration has been ordered by officials of bus lines it operates in eight southern cities, the National City Lines, with headquarters in Chicago, has met with resistance of city officials in Montgomery, Ala., and other Deep South states, to changes in racial seating policy. policy.

City and police officers threatened to arrest busline officers and employees or even passengers who try to enforce integration. Sticking to its guns, however, a company spokesman, B. W. Franklin, promised to lend support to any driver arrested for permitting racial integration on a bus in Montgomery.

There, the bus protest movement entered its 21st week when a mass meeting, led by the Rev. Martin L. King, voted to authorize the Montgomery Improvement Association to continue the boycott because of the attitude taken by ciy and state officials.

A summary of the situation reveals that in the border states bus desegregation—like that of the schools — will come about with some immediacy, but that in the die-hard states of Alabama, Georgia Mississippi, South Carolina, Florida and Louisiana, stiff resistance will be encountered.

THE NON-DIXIECRAT states are moving quickly to comply with the mandate of the highest court of the land:

Jim crow on city busses died quietly in Virginia Wednesday.

The policy of segregating the races on intra-city busses had been languishing for the past two years.

The death blow was struck Tuesday afternoon when Warren R. Pollard, president of the Virginia Transit Co., Richmond, announced that his operators were being instructed not to enforce segregation.

COMING 24 HOURS after the U.S. Supreme Court had summarily dismissed an appeal by a South Carolina transit firm as being "frivolous and without cause," the order ended jim crow on busses in Richmond, Norfolk and Portsmouth.

On Wednesday morning — the first day of the no segregation policy — bus drivers wheeled their vehicles from the terminal slightly apprehensive.

But Virginians of both races took the transition in stride. Almost without exception white passengers—conditioned by custom—took seats in the front of the buses. Colored passengers sat in the rear or middle sections.

Reporters making spot checks of the buses were hardpressed to find incidents worth reporting. On one Broad St. bus a white and colored man sat together and chatted amiably.

Sat. 5-5-56

PUBLIC SCHOOL principals called special assemblies Wednesday to warn pupils against demonstrations on the buses.

Bus drivers in Richmond and Norfolk said they had not enforced the segregation law on their vehicles in recent years, except on the complaint of a passenger.

A tobacco worker, waiting for a bus at a Church Hill intersection told this reporter:

"We don't especially want to sit in the front of the bus, we just didn't like being forced to sit in the rear."

With these words he climbed aboard the bus and took a seat about midway of the vehicle.

THOUGH VIRGINIA'S major cities ended bus segregation, many smaller communities clung to the old policy.

Spokesmen for bus lines in Martinsville, Danville and Petersburg said they would maintain segregated seating, at least for the immediate future.

It is expected that these companies will abandon the segregated seating policy as soon as opinions are rendered by their attorneys.

Bus segregation has also been ended in Charlottesville, Roanoke and Lynchburg.

Baltimore, Md.

WILLIAM M. CAGE, manager of Fredericksburg's Colonial Transit Co., said "no problem exists." He said the company had not enforced segregation in the past.

A jewelry store messenger who makes a living riding the buses (to deliver small packages) told the AFRO:

"Today was no different from any other. You just couldn't tell there had been a change. I only saw one colored person sitting in the front of the bus during the 15 trips I made today."

IN NORTH CAROLINA, the Duke Power Company immediately announced the desegregation of its lines in Durham and Greensboro. A spokesman said no reaction or opposition was expressed by city officials at either place.

San Antonio, Texas, became the first major southern city to be completely desegregated when city buses were added to the things where segregation could not longer be practiced.

All other public facilities, including schools, were already integrated.

Little opposition was offered to integration in El Paso, Wichita Falls and Tulsa, but in some border states, cities were "dragging their feet" in complying with the mandate of the Supreme Court.

38 * * *

IN LITTLE ROCK, Ark., for example, David Durbin, vice president of Citizens Coach Co., said transit company attorneys would not advise a company policy until the decision had been studied.

General

Frank Smith, state executive secretary of the NAACP, retorted that the association would seek an immediate end of segregation of the buses there. He said the first step would be a request, but declined to say what further steps are planned.

In Birmingham, Ala. too, the bus segregation situation is "being studied," according to city commissioners. Birmingham ordinances require racial segregation on city buses, it was pointed out.

POLICE COMMISSIONER Charles F. Hackmeyer of Mobile said Tuesday that segregation of bus passengers will be continued despite a decision of the company operating the city buses to desegregate.

Mayor Joseph N. Langan said, however, he felt the city ordinance ordering segregation on buses was invalidated by the Supreme Court's Monday ruling.

"I don't see there is anything the Mobile city government can do about it," Langan said. He proposed that bus segregation be continued on a voluntary basis.

LESS RECONCILED to the inevitable, however, is Georgia's Gov. Marvin Griffin, who pledged himself to resist the bus desegregation ruling at all odds. He called it "another example of an overt usurpation of the liberties of the people."

The most adamant of the cities resisting the Supreme Court ruling are Montgomery, Ala., where the bus protest movement is underway, and Jackson, Miss., where a White Citizens Council is firmly entrenched.

Mayor W. A. Gayle hinted at a court suit against the National City Bus Line to break its recently renewed 10-year franchise if the company did not rescind its desegregation order.

Said Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers "If the bus company operates in Montgomery, it will have to operate under Montgomery and Alabama laws."

HORACE CORT, a white photographer for the Associated Press, reported that a white bus driver threatened to kill him if he took a picture of some of the few colored persons who boarded a bus, Wednesday.

In Jackson, Miss., the White Citizens Council, Wednesday, commended Mayor Allen Thompson for his stand the previous day against the Supreme Court decision outlawing bus discrimination.

The mayor had declared that he "saw no reason whatsoever for any change in our policy of segregation on buses..."

No more back seats in Norfolk, Va., and 14 other Southern cities

U. S. Court Rules Out Seating Bias

MIAMI, Fla. — Segregated bus seating in three neighboring Southern states has turned U. S. civil rights "topsy turvy" for the time being.

In one state a boycott has protested and a federal court decision has banned it. In the other two states two boycotts and a civil suit are threatening to wipe it out of existence.

This is the score;

In Montgomery, Ala., a federal court decision last week banned segregated seating, but the bus boycott that started six months ago is continuing. And boycott leaders have given indication that the boycott will continue until their full demands have been guaranteed.

In Tallahassee, Fla., where A and M college students started boycotting city buses two weeks ago over segregation, enough steam was generated to start rolling similar action in Miami.

The president of the Miami chapter of the NAACP, the Rev. Theo R. Gibson, declared last week that Negroes may call a boycott of city buses if segregation in the vehicles is not abolished.

Then in Memphis, Tenn., last week, the NAACP filed a suit attacking the constitutionality of state laws requiring bus segregation and urging "a speedy hearing" before a three-judge federal court panel.

A 2-1 VERDICT

The Montgomery federal court struck down Alabama's segregation laws involving intrastate travel in a 2-1 decision holding that state laws requiring segregated seating were unconstitutional.

Judges Richard T. Rives and Frank M. Johnson held that enforced segregation violates the due process and equal protection clauses of the Federal Constitution. The third judge, Seaborn A. Lynn, submitted a dissenting opinion.

The court gave city and bus officials two weeks to appeal the decision before making the ruling effective.

Southeast of Alabama, in the neighboring state of Florida, the city of Tallahassee has become more unsettled than it was two weeks ago when some several thousand students at A and M college touched off a boycott against city buses over segregated seating.

The Tallahassee boycott, as late as Friday, seemed to be gaining momentum despite improved conditions promised by City and Transit company officials. Negro leaders of the boycott refused a compromise agreement and the city commission responded by not only discontinuing the route near the college but also a route in another section of the city which is predominantly Negro.

The impact of the Tallahassee bus boycott winged its way to Miami, where NAACP and civic leaders organized a special committee to "fight segregation in Miami's buses."

Members of the Miami NAACP said that a possible boycott of the Miami Transit company is being considered. They added that petitions asking that segregation be ended will be circulated among both white and Negro residents of the Florida city.

Just north of Alabama, in Memphis, Tenn., a civil suit aimed at cracking open Tennessee's laws calling for segregated bus seating was filed in District Court by members of the Memphis NAACP.

The suit was filed at the request of O. Z. Evers, 31, one of two men who left a cross town bus April 26 after the driver called police when he and another passenger, G. L. Myers, 46, took front seats and refused to move.

Police gave the men a choice of leaving the bus or being arrested.

Flanked on both sides by anti-segregation forces, Alabama, already reeling from within after being struck with a six-month old bus boycott, attempted to strike back last week by enjoining the NAACP from further activity within the state on grounds that it is a "foreign corporation."

In the same city where the boycott was born, Circuit Judge Walter Jones approved a temporary injunction against the organization which was chartered in New York.

The petition charged that the NAACP failed to file certain documents with the state and pay a "non-residents" fee. The petition also specifically inferred that the organization was behind the Autherine Lucy school riots and the boycott.

In a counter move against the NAACP ban, more than 500 cheering Negroes last week organized a new organization dedicated to wiping out racial segregation. They named it "The Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights."

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, elected head of the group, said the organization is not connected with the NAACP.

Thus, in three neighboring southern states, Tennessee, Alabama and Florida a federal court decision, a civil suit, a new human rights organization and two powerful bus boycotts are threatening to not only force bus segregation out of existence, but push forwad the whole civil rights fight in the United States.

Negroes Sit With Whites On Some Southern Buses

Commercial Appeal
Thurs 4-26-56
Memphis Tenn.

By GLENN ANTHONY
United Press Staff Correspondent

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 25.—Negroes sat freely with whites on buses in some Southern cities Wednesday but the same hard core of resistance that has delayed school integration kept the races apart in many others.

P. 1

Generally, compliance with the new Supreme Court action foretelling the end of legal segregation in transportation, fell into what is becoming a familiar Southern pattern.

Some cities in Virginia, North Carolina, Arkansas and East Tennessee, where faint beginnings have been made in integrated education, put up no barriers against first-come, first-served seating. But in most cities Negroes continued to take seats toward the rear, reluctant to make the first break from the old custom.

Little Rock Firm Acts

In Little Rock, Citizens Coach Co. announced that Negroes and whites may sit where they like on city buses. A company spokesman said, "We will comply with the law as set down by the Supreme Court."

Word went out late Wednesday afternoon to supervisors and drivers of the company to permit passengers to seat themselves without regard to race.

The unyielding segregation stand was found in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, although bus lines serving some of their cities instructed drivers not to enforce segregation further.

Local and state governments simply interposed their own segregation laws over the Supreme Court's implied authority.

more vividly illustrated than in Montgomery, where both state and city have threatened to prosecute the bus company, drivers and passengers — white or black—who try to bring about indiscriminate seating. The feeling persisted despite a 20-week boycott by Negroes of the segregated buses which has bitten deeply into the economy of the city.

Boycott Still On

The Negroes have not called off their boycott so the showdown has been delayed in Montgomery.

Florida and Louisiana lately have taken positions in the ranks of unyielding southeastern states. No changeovers to integrated buses or schools was reported in Florida, where all candidates for governor in a heated campaign have trumpeted continued segregation.

Louisiana, which has made a start toward integration of graduate and parochial schools, was operating under the state segregation law on the question of public transportation. Buses in the three larger cities, New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Shreveport, made no move toward desegregation.

Commercial

Actually, the Supreme Court's terse refusal to interfere with a ruling against segregation in a South Carolina case last Monday did not constitute an immediate order for mixed seating everywhere.

Appeal

Attorneys in Washington said it left considerable room for legal maneuvering and a number of Southern areas were taking advantage of it.

P. 2

Reaction Spotty

Bus lines in Charleston and Columbia, S. C., are operated by the oSuth Carolina Electric and Gas Co., defendant in the suit which reached the Supreme Court. The utility has not issued a formal statement of its intentions and the state insists its owr segregation law still prevails. But it was reported several Negroes have ridden among whites in Columbia recently and the drivers did not interfere.

Some Negroes sat in the front with whites Wednesday in Richmond and Norfolk, Va., where the Virginia Transit Co. formally ended segregated seating and called for passenger co-operation. There were no incidents.

Bus companies in most North Carolina cities reported they have not enforced segregation for some time and that where it continued it was done on a voluntary basis.

In Knoxville Jim Burk, president of the City Transit Line, said the buses have stopped separating white and Negro passengers and added, "I hope they can get along." But in other major cities of the state, Memphis, Nashville and Chattanooga, operators and city officials were awaiting state guidance.

They got little clarification from State Public Service Commissioner John Dwyer who said, "We've got Jim Crow law in Tennessee and I'm not going to tell them to desegregate and violate the law."

In Montgomery, B. W. Franklin, vice president of National City Lines which operates buses in the city and a number of other Southern cities, defended his firm's desegregation order of Tuesday.

Meeting Tonight

"We practiced segregation here (in Montgomery) under state and city laws," Mr. Franklin said. "I will not admit that we are violating those laws now, because the Supreme Court has ruled them invalid."

Mr. Franklin said the company would assist any driver who is arrested under local laws "as long as the driver is carrying out the company's instructions."

The tset in Montgomery may come after Thursday night when the Montgomery Improvement Association, a Negro group, holds a mass meeting. The association's members have been prominently identified with the bus boycott and only a few Negroes in the city, who still take rear seats, are riding the public carriers.

U.S. Bus Ruling Confuses Rodman

By JIM CHANEY.

The court presumably held compulsory segregation on city buses and all other public carriers is unconstitutional. It didn't say that; it merely dismissed on appeal from a lower court which had held against segregation on Columbia, S. C., buses.

All the U. S. Supreme Court really said was: Per Curiam. The appeal is dismissed. Slaker v. O'Connor, 278 U. S. 188."

Rodman was merely puzzled at first. By Tuesday, after he had read what the newspapers had to say of the opinion, he was suspicious. Yesterday he told reporters he was bewildered. He suspected te Supreme Court justices were bewildered, too.

Only one thing seems definite, as he views the case, and that is that the opinion doesn't "blind North Carolina because it is not a party to the suit."

The Washington newspapermen who reported the opinion Monday seemed definite enough. The Associated Press and the other national news services sent out word hat the nation's highest court had uled unanimously against segregated seating on all public conveyances.

"The Supreme Court today," the Associated Press wrote, "extended its ban on racial segreagaton to public transportation within the borders of a state. I did so by dismissing as frivolous an appeal from a U. S. Court of Appeals decision in Richmond, Va., that segregation on intrastate buses violates the federal onstitution."

Decision is Terse.

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals had held in its order, "We do not think the separate but equal doctrine can any longer be regarded as a correct statement of the law."

The fact that the Supreme Court had dismissed the appeal from the decision would mean, unless Rodman doubts are proved justified, that the Supreme Curt intended for the lower court order to stand. That's the effect under normal circumstaces when an appeal is dismissed.

Rodman doesn't say that the Washington news agencies made a mistake. His point is that the Supreme Court blundered in citing the case of Slaker v. O'Connor if it meant only to affirm the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

"I feel . . .," he said, "they dont know themselves how they've ruled."

The words "Per Curiam" were clear enough. They mean, to use layman's language, that the court spoke unanimously, as a group and that no single membr of the court signed the opinion. It's in the rest "The appeal is dismissed. Slaker v. O'connor, 278 U. S. 188." — that Rodman finds the mystery.

News & Observer

He looked up the case of Slaker v. O'Connor in the bound copies of U. S. Supreme Court opinions big lawyers have in their offices. He found, he reported to the reporters, that the "headline" over the case said something a bit different than the opinion itself. It's quite possible, he suggested, that the court just made the citation on the basis of the "headline" without bothering to read the text.

The bus case first was heard before Federal District Judge George Bell Timmerman in February, 1955, in South Carolina. Sarah Mae Flemming, the plaintiff, was suing the South Carolina Electric and Gas Company for forcing her to take a seat at the rear of one of its buses. She claimed her civil rights had been violated.

Some Areas Give Up Bus Segregation

Negroes sat freely with whites on buses in some southern cities yesterday, but the same hard core of resistance that has delayed school integration kept the races separated in many others.

Generally, compliance with the new Supreme Court action foretelling the end of legal segregation in transportation, fell into what is becoming a familiar Southern pattern.

But in most of them, Negroes continued to take seats toward the rear, reluctant to make the first break from the old custom.

(Washington legal experts have said that Monday's Supreme Court order, hailed as ending segregation on intrastate transport, was nowhere near so sweeping. They believe the order was merely procedural and the net effect was only to send the appeal back to the lower courts for further proceedings.)

The unyielding segregation stand was ofund in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, although bus lines serving some cities instructed drivers not to enforce segragation further.

Local and state governments simply interposed their own segregation laws over the Supreme Court's authority.

NEW THREATS IN GEORGIA

ATLANTA -(INS)- Seizure of local bus systems by the National Guard to maintain segregation in Georgia was suggested.

State Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said that under the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing bus segregation, Georgia would be "defenseless" in a similar federal court action within the state.

Daily Herald

But, Cook said, he thought it would be "the duty" of the Governor to declare limited martial law and seize and operate bus companies to maintain segregation.

The seizure, Cook said might be necessary under state police powers to preserve law and order. He said there had been violence over racial integration in Detroit, Chicago and Alabama and would be danger of violence in Georgia if segregation on public transit vehicles was ordered ended.

Miami Negroes Talk Bus Boycott

Post-Herald
Thom, Fla.

MIAMI, June 8 (U.P.) — Miami has been threatened with a bus boycott by Negroes, the fourth Southern city to come under fire of groups demanding integrated riding privileges. P. 4

Tallahassee, Fla., and Montgomery, Ala., are involved in actual rider strikes. One is threatened in Memphis.

The Rev. Theo R. Gibson, president of the Miami chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said today a special committee will present demands to officials of the Miami Transit Co., to end segregation practices.

Sat. 6-9-56

"If they don't come across we will call a boycott or go to courts or both," Gibson said. "The strategy hasn't been worked out yet."

Segregation is not rigidly enforced on Miami buses but whites customarily sit in the front and Negroes from rear to front. Often Negroes and white passengers sit side by side when buses are crowded.

Segregation On All Transits Wiped Out

Informer Sat. 4-28-56

Houston, Texas

WASHINGTON— The Supreme Court of the United States knocked out segregation in travel on public utilities and just about buried the doctrine of "separate but equal." Specifically, the court ruled out segregation in cities and travel across and inside of the respective states that still had segregation laws.

P. 1

Taken with the Interstate Commerce Commission's decision in November 1955, holding segregation in interstate travel illegal, Monday's decision leaves segregation in travel no place to hide its head. Between the ICC and Monday's decision buses, street cars, trains, air planes, ships, cable cars, and every form of public transportation of whatever nature and wherever situated, are now under the ban against segregation.

The case arose in Columbia, South Carolina, when Mrs Sarah Flemings, who had been subjected to indignities because she refused to accept segregation on the bus filed suit for $25,000. The U S District Court dismissed the suit on the basis of the laws of South Carolina. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, sitting at Richmond, Virginia, reversed the lower court and held that under the Supreme Court's reasoning in the educational cases of 1954, segregation in intrastate and-or city travel was void. Monday the Supreme Court of the United States merely accepted the ruling of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals and noted that the bus company's appeal was trivial and a waste of time.

Monday's ruling also brought out in Houston, Texas, the fact that the bus company in the city had not enforced, nor intended to enforce, segregation on the buses since the Supreme Court's educational decision of May 17, 1954.

There were the usual sputters by Attorneys General Cook of Georgia and John Ben Shepperd of Texas et al, but it is generally believed that local segregation is dead along with interstate segregation. Now the city and its officials will be subject to suit for violation of Negroes' rights under color of law and subject to severe damages in addition to possible criminal prosecution.

Informer P. 10

The decision also indicates that the Supreme Court is not modifying its attitude toward the illegality of segregation because the country is now entering a political campaign. Indeed, the decision indicates again the grim determination of the court to strike segregation on every occasion.

The effect of the decision in Montgomery (Ala.), where the boycott has been going on, will be first to kill the action and fine against Mrs Parks, which originally started the whole mess there. The second consequence in Montgomery will be that segregation being void, boycotting it not only is a privilege but is probably impelled. It can be predicted that the suits against Mrs Parks and against the 95 other Negroes will ultimately die.

The fact that the bus company has gone on and given notice of desegregation in Montgomery, contrary to the desire of the city authorities, indicates how anxious the bus company was to get from under that boycott. As to the city's counter-position that it will maintain segregation on buses in Montgomery, it is likely to be more words than anything else, if the transit company sticks to its idea of desegregating the buses. The boycotters have not spoken, and probably won't until they see whether or not the bus company can make good its order against continuation of segregation.

At Houston (Tex.), the NAACP has called a meeting for 6 o'clock Tuesday to determine its policy. It is believed that it will advise the citizenry to take it easy, and not rush in protest of the law, before the NAACP can work out techniques to make it cost anybody who tries to keep segregation going.

Also in Houston it was noticed Tuesday that Negroes going to work were sitting all over the bus and whites were doing the same, in some instances, sitting besides the Negroes.

Unlawful To Segregate By Race On Public Buses

Sat. 4-28-56

WASHINGTON —(INS)—The Supreme Court agreed that Negroes and whites may not be segregated on intrastate buses in South Carolina.

The high tribunal in effect upheld an appeals court ruling that the state's bus segregation law is unconstitutional.

It did so by dismissing an appeal from the lower court decision brought by the South Carolina Electric and Gas Co., in a case involving Mrs. Sarah Mae Fleming, a Negro.

Norfolk, Va.

The woman then brought a suit for $25,000 againsct the transportation utility. A federal district court dismissed the case but the appeals court later reversed its decision.

The Supreme Court had previously ruled that segregation in interstate transportation is unconstitutional, but Monday's decision involved travel within a single state as well.

THE HIGH tribunal gave no reason for its action but merely handed down an order dismissing the case brought by the Electric and Gas company.

THIS ACTION by the Supreme Court has significance only a little short of its historic ruling which outlawed segregation in public schools.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., for instance, has experinced prolonged turmoil over the segregation-on-transportation question, involving a boycott of the bus line by Negroes. P. 2

In Monday's action, the Supreme Court by inference branded as "frivolous" South Carolina's appeal to it to uphold segregation in transportation.

Its unsigned order cited a case titled Slaker V. O'Conner. In that case, the high court threw out an appeal and said it had been taken "without any authority of law" and "thereby needlessly consumed our time."

Bus Ruling DIDN'T Outlaw Jim Crow

New York

By WILLIAM V. SHANNON
New York Post Correspondent

Washington, April 25—It became clear today that the Supreme Court's decision Monday regarding segregation on intrastate buses did not mean what observers north and south of the Mason-Dixon line originally believed.

General

Legal experts studying the decision agreed that it was not nearly as far-reaching as the early headlines indicated.

The court did not rule that segregation on local bus lines violated the Constitution. Instead, it merely followed a long-standing precedent that the court does not hear appeals in any case until a Federal District Court has issued a final order.

Since there was no final order in this instance, the effect of the Supreme Court's order was to return the case to the District Court for trial.

The newspaper and press association reporters who jumped far afield in their interpretation of the Supreme Court's action may have red faces today, but the gentlemen who should really be covered with embarrassment are the attorneys general of Virginia, South Carolina and Texas.

They made the same mistake. Two hours after the Supreme Court announced its ruling these attorneys general issued a joint statement angrily denouncing it as an "invasion of state and municipal rights."

Gov. Griffin of Georgia also rushed into the breach, calling the decision "another example of an overt usurpation of the liberties of the people. We shall oppose this latest decision just as we are resisting the decision in the school segregation case by all legal means."

Post P. 18

It now appears this rhetoric was premature.

The case began when Mrs. Sarah Flemming sued a South Carolina bus company for $25,000 because a driver forced her to leave a bus when she refused to move to the rear section reserved for Negroes.

Wed. 4-25-56

The Federal District Court, without holding a trial, dismissed her suit on the grounds that the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision had not overruled the "separate but equal" doctrine as far as travel within a state was concerned.

Mrs. Flemming appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals. This court ruled that a substantive issue of constitutional law regarding civil rights was involved and ordered the lower court to hear the case on its merits. The bus company then appealed this ruling to the Supreme Court.

General

There are two ways in which a party to a case can bring the dispute to the Supreme Court. The usual method is to file a petition for certiorari. The Supreme Court can grant this petition or not at its own discretion. In other words, it can choose not to hear a case if it does not think a substantive constitutional issue is involved.

No Final Ruling

The other method is for one side to file an appeal in which the constitutionality of a state law is involved, as it was here. The Supreme Court has no discretion and must rule on such an appeal.

The hitch is, however, that the Supreme Court never takes an appeal unless the District Court has made a final finding in a case. No such final order had been reached in Mrs. Flemming's case because the bus company had appealed before there was any trial on the merits.

The precedent on this procedural point was laid down in Slaker vs. O'Connor in 1929. This is the precedent cited in all the standard works on Supreme Court practice and it was the precedent the court cited Monday. This ruling, therefore, was not a decision on the merits of Mrs. Flemming's case. It merely reaffirmed the Circuit Court's decision that a trial on the matter should be held.

Why Bus Line Acted

This simple technical point should have been clear to the bus company's lawyers even if it was not to the legal giants who serve as attorneys general in the Southern states.

The question arises then—did the bus company lawyers deliberately miss the point of Monday's announcement?

The answer may well be that the bus companies would like nothing better than to have segregation outlawed once and for all; the sooner the better. Segregation is economically wasteful. Disputes over segregation mean that companies lose customers and lose money.

Support for this interpretation can be found in the speedy action of the National City Lines, the Chicago firm which owns the bus company in Montgomery, Ala., in applying the decision on its own lines.

The Montgomery bus company was not involved in the case; but the Negro boycott there has put the firm in the red. National City Lines was obviously eager to use what it thought was the court's ruling as a pretext for escaping its own predicament.

Future Prospect Seen

Legal experts consulted by The Post said it was entirely possible that this case may eventually reach the Supreme Court again, once the District Court has issued a final order. If this or a similar case reaches the Supreme Court in a legal form which would permit the court to rule directly on the merits, there seems little doubt that it would find bus segregation unlawful.

"The Plessy vs. Ferguson decision of 1896 which announced the separate-but-equal doctrine was a Louisiana intrastate railroad case," one lawyer observed. "The Supreme Court has outlawed segregation in schools, on municipal golf courses, and in interstate travel, but it has never directly overturned Plessy vs. Ferguson.

"It is only a matter of time, however, before it will.

"Sometime in the next few years, when it gets the right case, the court will undoubtedly make the decision a lot of people thought it made on Monday."

The U.S. Supreme Court's clear-cut ruling against segregation on intra-state buses, directly affecting buses in Montgomery, Ala., had repercussions throughout the Southland during the past week.

At Tallahassee, Fla., Atty. Gen. He said the Supreme Court ruling will not affect transportation in Florida" until a direct suit is brought attacking our laws and ordiances."

THIS ECHOED the view expressed by state officials in Georgia, Tennessee, South Carolina and Mississippi. These states are apparently adopting the same policy they followed in resisting the Supreme Court's ruling against school segregation — doing nothing to desegregate until specifically ordered to by direct court attack on each state law.

Colored ciizens of Tallahassee, who boycotted that city's buses, have yet to challenge Florida segregation laws in court. A suit asking an end to segregation on buses in Miami was filed Oct. 12. It has not yet been set for hearing.

A BUS segregation suit in Columbia, S. C., which the Supreme Court once before sent back to the district court, is still in legal processes.

Other Segregation developments:

A federal judge in Nashville Wednesday took under advisement the city school Board's contention that its plan to integrate first grade classes nxt September is a proper show of "good faith" under the Supreme Court ruling. The court did not indicate when it would rule on whether to permit this, with another grade added each year, or whether to require full and immediate integration as asked by Negro complainants.

Bus Decree Conference Scheduled By Brownell

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (AP) — Atty. Gen. Brownell today summoned federal prosecutors in 14 Southern states to a Washington conference on how to carry out the Supreme Court decree against racial segregation on buses.

He set the date, in a circular letter to the 34 U. S. district attorneys in the 14 states, as Dec. 10.

Brownell's letter said that it is clear from the Supreme Court decision of Nov. 13 on the Montgomery, Ala., bus segregation case, that discrimination against bus passengers on account of race is "a crime against the United States."

A number of state and municipal government spokesmen in Southern states have spoken out against the court's Montgomery ruling. Several have indicated that various state laws against mixing of races on transportation systems would have to be tested in separate court actions. They said that pending such tests, segregation would be continued on buses.

The Montgomery case was marked by a long bus boycott by Negroes.

Counsel for Montgomery Negroes in the case had asked last Saturday that the notification be sent out at once. The request came before Black in his capacity as presiding judge for the 5th U. S. Circuit Court.

Supreme Court aides said the bus case notice now may be mailed about Dec. 12. It will go to members of a special court which sat in Montgomery and handed down the antisegregation decision affirmed by the Supreme Court.

Brownell's letter calling the Justice Department conference went to U. S. attorneys in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Brownell told them the conference "will consider and decide upon measures most appropriate to secure observance of the United States Constitution and laws by carriers and all others who may hereafter require segregation of white and colored passengers on common carriers.'

The attorney general told them copies of state or local laws relating to racial segregation. He said the Nov. 13 court decision, which struck down Montgomery and Alabama statutes, makes it clear "that any such law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter."

"It is also clear," he added, "that the enforcement or observance of any such discriminatory measure by any common carrier of passengers will constitute in the future and in the light of the unmistakable declaration of the federal courts a willful deprivation by the carrier of the constitutional rights, privileges and immunities of those discriminated against and a crime against the United States.

"Anyone who commands, induces, procures, counsels, aids or abets the carrier in the commission of such crime is equally guilty," he said.

Officials of the City of Montgomery announced after the court decision that they would use every legal means available to continue separate seating arrangements for Negroes on Montgomery buses. They said this was required to preserve public safety and promote order.

Nonsegregated operation was attempted last spring by the private bus company which serves Montgomery, but was dropped under a state court order.

Ben Franklin, vice president of the Montgomery City Lines, said today his company is still required to segregate passengers under the state court order which "remains in force until further direct order by the U. S. District Court."

The Supreme Court decision is subject to a 25-day delay pending a possible move for rehearing.

MORE TESTS SEEN OVER BUS RULING

Some Southern States Vow to Keep Segregation Despite High Court

ATLANTA, Nov. 13 (AP)—The United States Supreme Court's latest ruling banning segregation on intrastate buses brought quick reaction today from state and municipal government spokesmen in the South.

Several indicated state laws against race mixing on transportation systems would have to be tested in separate court actions, and pending such tests, segregation would be continued on buses.

Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi said that state would continue to separate the races on public conveyances, despite the Supreme Court decision against segregation on Montgomery, Ala., buses.

'Our attitude about this decision," he said, "will be the same as about the school segregation cases." He added that the Supreme Court ruling was based on an Alabama statute and that Mississippi's newly enacted laws to strengthen segregation "are not involved."

Georgia to Fight Ruling

Georgia's Attorney General, Eugene Cook, said the ruling did not directly affect any Georgia city, but that it would set a precedent by which Federal District Courts would be bound. Gov. Marvin Griffin said Georgia would oppose by all legal means any effort to apply the ruling in the state.

In Florida, Richard Ervin, Attorney General, said bus segregation laws remain in effect in that state and must be enforced in spite of the Supreme Court ruling.

Senator W. M. Rainach, chairman of the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Segregation, said:

"I interpret the Supreme Court's new decision on bus segregation to mean the court plans to outlaw separate but equal facilities in every phase of our life. The original school segregation decision was not Constitutional and this is just another unconstitutional decision but the same court."

Govs. George Bell Timmerman of South Carolina, Frank Clement of Tennessee and Luther hodges of North Carolina withheld comment.

In Montgomery, where Negroes have been boycotting the buses, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., one of the boycott leaders, said a mass meeting would be held tomorrow night to decide whether to call off the boycott there in view of the high court ruling. He said Negroes "unquestionably" will decide to end the boycott."

'Glorious Daybreak'

Mr. King termed the ruling "a glorious daybreak to end a long night of enforced segregation in public transportation."

There was no immediate comment from Montgomery bus company officials. The company estimated last week that the boycott by Negroes had cost about $750,000 in revenue.

In Tuskegee, Ala., State Senator Sam Engelhardt called the court ruling "another invasion of a local self-government." Mr. Engelheardt, a leader in the White Citizens Council, a group opposing integration, said that "as far as I am concerned they can move the Montgomery City Lines, Inc., lock, stock and barrel, to Washington, D. C."

"This is another attempt by a group of misguided zealots in Washington to torpedo constitutional government," Mr. Engelhardt said.

Samuel G. Johnson, Mayor of St. Petersburg, Fla., said that city did not have a law calling for bus segregation but the races were separated as a matter of custom an "apparently the City Council is not expecting to make any change in the policy."

N. A. A. C. P. Hails Ruling

Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, hailed the Supreme Court's ruling with the following statement here yesterday:

"Today's Supreme Court decision in the Montgomery bus case is a further step in direction of wiping out all forms racial segregation in public facilities services and institutions.

"Now that the Supreme Court has spoken with clarity we are hopeful that the majority of communities throughout the South will fall in line. The whole matter of bus segregation has been one of the most irritating and humiliating problems confronting the colored people in the South. Often bus drivers have been discorteous and rude to Negro passengers, including women with small children."

Brownell Calls Meeting On Bus Desegregation

U. S. Attorneys of Kentucky, 13 Other States To Discuss Ruling Enforcement Dec. 10

By The United Press

Washington, Nov. 19.—Attorney General Brownell today summoned United States attorneys from 14 Southern and border states to a December 10 meeting to discuss enforcement of the Supreme Court's bus-desegregation ruling.

He told the attorneys State and local laws that call for the separation of white and Negro passengers on intrastate buses now constitute "a crime against the United States."

The one-day conference will consider "those measures most appropriate" for the Justice Department "to secure observance" of the court's decision. U. S. attorneys are charged with upholding federal laws in their areas.

The Supreme Court last week declared local bus-segregation laws unconstitutional. The test case involved separation of white and Negro passengers on the Montgomery, Ala., bus system. State and local laws called for such segregation.

Local officials in several states have said they will not abide by the decision immediately and will fight it by "every legal means." They argued that segregation is in the interest of public safety and necessary to promote order.

Negro groups, headed by the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People, asked the high court Saturday to force local compliance. Negroes also have conducted a boycott of the Montgomery bus system.

However, Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black today rejected the Negroes' petition to speed transmission of the decision to a special three-man Federal Court in Montgomery. This means the order will not leave here until about December 12.

The Negroes urged immediate issuance of the order because allied cases are pending in State and U. S. courts

Justice Black said that "after consultation with all members of the court, and finding them in agreement with my views, this motion for forthwith isuance of the opinion and judgment in this case is denied."

In his letter to them he noted that before the court edict "a number of states, counties, municipalities, and other agencies of local government had adopted discriminatory measures."

"It is now clear that any such law, statute, ordinance, or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter," he said. He added that if the laws are not repealed all local agencies and persons connected with them must be considered "equally guilty."

Brownell Summons 14 To Discuss Enforcement Of Court Decree

BUT SPEEDUP REJECTED

Justice Black Denies Plea For Immediate Order On Montgomery Test Case Decided Earlier

By J. W. DAVIS
Associated Press Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19. — Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Monday summoned Federal prosecutors in 14 Southern and border states to a Washington conference on how to carry out the Supreme Court decree against racial segregation on buses.

He set the date, in a circular letter to the 34 United States district attorneys in the 14 states, as Dec. 10.

Mr. Brownell's letter said it is clear from the Supreme Court decision of Nov. 13 on the Montgomery, Ala., bus segregation case, that discrimination against bus passengers on account of race is "a crime against the United States."

Marked By Boycott

A number of state and municipal government spokesmen in Southern states have spoken out against the court's Montgomery ruling; several have indicated various state laws against mixing of races on transportation systems would have to be tested in separate court actions. They said that pending such tests, segregation would be continued on buses.

The Montgomery case was marked by a long bus boycott by Negroes against segregated travel.

Justice Hugo Black of the Supreme Court issued a statement Monday saying that after consulting with all other members of the court, he was refusing to order immediate issuance of the court's notice of the decision.

Calls For Law Copies

Counsel for Montgomery Negroes in the case had asked last Saturday that the notification be sent out at once. Normal procedure takes 25 days. The request came before Justice Black in his capacity as presiding judge for the Fifth Circuit Court.

Supreme Court aides said the bus case notice now may be mailed about Dec. 12. It will go to members of a special court which sat in Montgomery and handed down the antisegregation decision affirmed by the Supreme Court.

Commercial Appeal

Mr. Brownell's letter calling the Justice Department conference went to United States attorneys in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, George, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia. p. 5

The attorney general told the district attorneys to bring with them copies of state or local laws relating to racial segregation. He said the Nov. 13 court decision, which struck down Montgomery and Alabama statutes, makes it clear "that any such law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter."

Officials of the City of Montgomery announced after the court decision they would use every legal means available to continue separate seating arrangements for Negroes and whites on Montgomery buses. They said this was required to preserve public safety and promote order. 11-20-56

Nonsegregated operation was attempted last spring by the private bus company which serves Montgomery, but was dropped under a state court order.

Ben Franklin, vice president of the Montgomery line, said Monday his company is still required to segregate passengers under the state court order which "remains in force until further direct order by the United States District Court."

Mississippian Calls Action New Federal Encroachment

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 19.—(INS)—Mississippi Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterseon said Monday that forthcoming conference of United States attorneys to map desegregation plans on public carriers was "just another example of Federal encroachment of states rights."

Mr. Patterson said:

"If the United States attorney general had any regard for states rights he would also seek to confer in person with state officials who are responsible for state laws."

Mr. Patterson said Mississippi has "statutes on the books" which prohibit the mixing of races on buses and other public carriers and added:

"As far as I'm concerned, they'll stay on the books."

He said:

"This (the high court ruling) is just another instance of the repeal of state laws by court decree without regard to the rights of a state as contained in the Tenth Amendment to the United States Constitution."

cation. He will return to Memphis next Tuesday.

Meanwhile, a challenge of constitutionality of the state's segregation laws on public transportation by O. Z. Evers, Negro postal clerk, continued through legal processes of Federal Court toward a hearing.

A three-judge court headed by Circuit Judge John D. Martin Sr. is trying to reach an agreement on a hearing date which will not conflict with cases already entered on the dockets of Judge Marion S. Boyd of Memphis and Judge William E. Miller of Nashville.

The suit was brought against the City Commission as individuals; Memphis Street Railway Co., an operator, Police Chief J. C. Macdonald and two officers. Evers, a Memphis Negro, contended the segregation laws are in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Mr. Brownell Serves Notice

Montgomery and Tallahassee officials have been given a fair and solemn notice. Afro American

There is no "legal way" by which segregated seating can be maintained on buses in the face of the Supreme Court's clear and unmistakable ruling. Sat. 12-1-56

Attorney General Herbert Brownell's action in calling a Dec. 10 conference of United States attorneys in 14 states must have come as a rude jolt to those governors, states attorneys general and mayors, who felt they could safely thumb their noses at the court's ruling.

Baltimore, Md. p. 4

IN HIS CALL of the conference, Mr. Brownell emphasized three points: 38b General

1. All state laws or local ordinances requiring segregation on buses are "dead" and no longer enforceable.

2. Any bus company or transit authority which attempts to enforce segregated seating on local buses is committing a crime against the United States.

3. Any official who aids, abets or counsels the continuance of segregation on buses or street cars will be committing a crime against the United States.

Of greater importance, the Brownell letter does something else.

It serves blunt notice that cities and states will not be allowed to resort to the usual delaying tactic of compelling an appeal to the Supreme Court on each charge of discrimination.

THE HEAVY and costly burden of making reluctant cities and bus companies comply no longer rests on the individual or private organization.

That task has now been shouldered by the Department of Justice, whose sworn duty is to enforce Federal laws and protect Constitutional rights.

Facing certain prosecution for committing a "crime against the United States" is not an inviting prospect for any official, even one from Mississippi.

The Brownell action is likely to bring the popular Dixie pastime of hurling defiance at the nation's highest court to a hasty and timely end.

U. S. Attorneys in South to Meet Dec. 10 —Aim Is to Assure State Compliance With Decision of Supreme Court

Times 11-20-56

By LUTHER A. HUSTON

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19—The first step in a drive by the Administration to wipe out racial segregation in intrastate transportaton was taken by the Justice Department today.

Herbert Brownell Jr., the Attorney General, called a conference here Dec. 10 of United States attorneys in fourteen Southern border states. He said the purpose was to devise measures to assure state and municipal compliance with "the United States Constitution and laws."

The attorneys who will attend the conference come from districts where segregation of passengers by race is required under state laws or local ordinances.

Mr. Brownell's action followed a Supreme Court ruling Nov. 13 outlawing segregation on bus lines in Alabama and Montgomery. The decision was interpreted as voiding similar practices in other states. Some Southern officials say, however, that they intend to maintain segregated bus lines.

The court refused today to expedite issuance of its mandate on the bus ruling. A mandate is an order sent to lower courts. It contains the court's ruling.

Under normal procedure a mandate follows a decision by about twenty-five days. Last Saturday attorneys for Negroes who had brought the case to the court asked that the notice of its decision be sent out at once.

Justice Hugo L. Black received the request in his capacity as presiding justice for the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, which includes Alabama. He issued a statement today saying that after consultation with all other members of the court he would refuse to order immediate issuance of the mandate.

Court officials said the notice probably would be mailed about Dec. 12 to the members of the three-judge Federal court that also had held an Alabama law and a Montgomery ordinance requiring segregation on buses invalid under the Federal Constitution. The case was the outgrowth of a lengthy boycott of municipal bus lines by Negroes in Montgocery.

United States Attorneys asked to attend the conference are in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Cklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

All Such Bans Called 'Dead'

Times 11-20-56

"Prior to the Supreme Court's decision a number of states, counties, municipalities and other agencies of local government had adopted discriminatory measures of this kind," Mr. Brownell wrote. "It is now clear that any such law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter.

"It is also clear that the enforcement or observance of any such discriminatory measure by any common carrier of passengers will constitute in the future and in the light of the unmistakable declaration of the Federal courts a willful deprivation by the carrier of the constitutional rights, privileges and immunities of those discriminated against and a crime against the United States. Anyone who commands, induces, procures, counsels, aids or abets the carrier in the commission of any such crime is equally guilty."

The Federal Attorneys were asked to bring with them the text of any unrepealed discriminatory statues or ordinances enacted in their districts.

"The purpose of the conference," Mr. Brownell said, "will be to consider and decide upon those measures most appropriate for the Department of Justice to take to secure observance of the United States Constitution and laws by the carriers and all others."

Florida Officials Critical

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Nov. 19 (UP)—Attorney General Richard Ervin of Florida criticized Mr. Brownell today for trying to "force" Southern states to end local bus hegregation.

Mr. Ervin declared that Mr. Brownell's action would "cause more harm than good" and charged that the Federal Government "has no authority to start mass action against our state."

"Mr. Brownell ought to stay out of it and leave it to private litigants," Mr. Ervin said. "Each case should come up individually in the regular way and why Brownell should be sticking his nose into it is something I cannot understand.

"The courts will handle this in the usual way without him coming in with force action."

Segregation Expected to Stand

CHICAGO, Nov. 19 (AP)—An official of National City Lines said today that operation of segregated buses in Montgomery, Ala., probably would continue until a state court injunction against non-segregated operations is lifted.

Ben Franklin, vice president of National City, which operates the Montgomery City Lines, Inc., said:

"We must operate under standing judicial orders directed to us. That means the state injunction remains in force until further direct order by the United States District Court."

Brownell sets parley to plan bus integration

Birmingham Ala.

Mon. 11-19-56

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (AP)—Atty. Gen. Brownell today called a conference to plan a course of action for federal authorities in the South under the Supreme Court decree striking down racial segregation on public buses.

BROWNELL SAID in a circular letter to them the conference "will consider and decide upon measures most appropriate to secure observance of the United States Constitution and laws by carriers and all others who may hereafter require segregation of white and colored passengers on common carriers."

The attorney general instructed the Southern prosecutors to bring with them copies of any local or state law in effect in their district relating to racial segregation.

Brownell said that in view of the Supreme Court decision of Nov. 13 invalidating Alabama and Montgomery, Ala., statutes on the subject that "it is now clear that any such law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as dead letter."

OF THE SEGREGATION statutes, Brownell asserted:

"It is also clear that the enforcement or observance of any such discriminatory measure by any common carrier of passengers will constitute in the future and in the light of the unmistakable declaration of the federal courts a willful deprivation by the carrier of the constitutional rights, privileges and immunities of those discriminated against and a crime against the United States. Anyone who commands, induces, procures, counsels, aids or abets the carrier in the commission of any such crime is equally guilty."

After the Supreme Court decision, Montgomery city authorities announced they would employ "every legal means available" to continue separate seating arrangements for white and Negro passengers on buses in that city. City officials said this policy was based upon preserving public safety and promoting order in the city.

NEGROES BID COURT RUSH BUS MANDATE

Times P. 29-L

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17 (UP)—Four attorneys for a group of Negroes in Montgomery, Ala., urged the Supreme Court today to issue an immediate order implementing a decision that would outlaw segregation on intrastate buses.

Sun. 11-18-56

The court gave no indication when it would act on the request.

It ruled Monday against racial segregation on buses, disputing the view that states can enforce laws for separate but equal facilities. However, the mandate was not sent to the lower courts immediately.

New York

Thurgood M. Marshall, general counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, headed the attorneys who asked Justice Hugo L. Black to speed up the order. They picked Justice Black, an Alabamian, because he is the Supreme Court Justice responsible for the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, which includes Alabama.

Montgomery Negroes boycotted the transit system for months because they objected to segregation. Their attorneys said that quick issuance of the mandate would settle four pending lower court cases involving the boycott and related issues.

Three of the cases are before the Montgomery County Circuit Court and one is in Federal District Court in Montgomery. One case involves an injunction against the use of Negroes' cars as a motor pool and another is an appeal of the conviction of a Negro leader for violating the state's anti-boycott law.

segregation on Montgomery, Ala., buses.

"Our attitude about this decision," Coleman said, "will be the same as about the school segregation cases." He added that the Supreme Court ruling was based on an Alabama statute and that Mississippi's newly enacted laws to strengthen segregation "are not involved."

Georgia's Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said the ruling does not directly affect any Georgia city but that it would set a precedent by which federal district courts would be bound. Gov. Marvin Griffin said Georgia would oppose by all legal means any effort to apply in his state a high court ruling aimed at banning bus segregation.

In Florida, Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin said bus segregation laws remain in effect in that state and must be enforced despite the Supreme Court ruling.

Southern Leaders Will Await Separate Tests Of Bus Laws

Montgomery, Ala.

Wed. 11-14-56

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The U.S. Supreme Court's latest ruling on the explosive issue of race mixing—banning segregation on state and city buses—brought quick reaction Tuesday from state and municipal government spokesmen in the South.

Several indicated state laws against race mixing on transportation systems would have to be tested in separate court actions, and pending such tests, segregation would be continued on buses.

Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi said that state would continue to separate the races on public conveyances despite the Supreme Court decision against every phase of our life. The original school segregation decision was not constitutional and this is just another unconstitutional decision by the same court.

Wed. 11-14-56

Negroes have been boycotting buses in both Montgomery, Ala., and Tallahassee, Fla., in protest against segregation of the races. In Montgomery, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., one of the boycott leaders, said a mass meeting would be held tomorrow night to decide whether to call off the boycott there in view of the high court ruling. He said Negroes "unquestionably" will decide to end the boycott.

Bus Segregation Loses–

Sixty years ago the United States Supreme Court considered that racial segregation on railroads was permissible under the Constitution if "seperate but equal facilities were provided. This rule extended into education and other fields until it became increasingly questioned in various tests leading to the school desegregation decision of May, 1954.

A year and a half later the Interstate Commerce Commission ordered an end to discrimination on interstate trains and busses whics implied an "inherent inferiority because of race". Now the Supreme Court has held that a state law and city ordinance which require segregation on passenger bus within a state or city violates the "equal protection of the laws" guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment and is unconstitutional.

The logic of more limited decisions involving transportation, schools, recreational facilities, and real estate law has pointed in this direction for several years. Nevertheless, the ruling is one which calls for major readjustments in customs and thinking and in many southern states.

The governors of Mississippi and Georgia have asserted they will resist application of the decision. Further suits therefore may be required in several states, so that compliance will proceed only with something like that "deliberate speed" which the high court prescribed in the school segregation order.

In Montgomery, Alabama, where the case arose and the decision directly applies, the result give victory to an 11-month boycott by Negro bus riders which has cost the traction company an estimated $750,000. This show of economic strength marshaled against discrimination seems to indicate that, while the Supreme Court ruling may be difficult to enforce in some instances, there is also practical as well as constitutional difficulty about enforcing segregation laws.

Two Railroads In South Start Integration

Call Kansas City, Mo. 1-13-54

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — Two railroads operating in the Deep South, — the Southern Railway and the Richmond, Fredericksburg and the Potomac railroad — began operating last Tuesday on a non-segregated basis, complying with an Interstate Commerce Commission order to end jim crow practices by Jan. 10.

The Southern Railway, which operates between Washington, D. C., and the Deep South, announced that "Colored" and "White" signs on its waiting rooms were taken down as far as interstate travelers were concerned.

However, the Southern operates in many states with segregation laws and these would have to be observed with respect to intrastate travel.

In principal, this means separate waiting rooms for Negro and white passengers who start and end their trip within one state. But distinguishing between an interstate and intrastate passenger at any given station seemed to make the segregation impractical.

W. Thomas Rice, president of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac, said the segregation signs would come down on its waiting rooms between Richmond and Washington. He said his line had no problem concerning interstate and intrastate travelers.

Several other railroads operating in the south said they have had no problem.

The Baltimore and Ohio, which operates in Kentucky and Virginia, said there is no segregation on trains. Officials said conforming with the ICC decree on waiting room facilities and complying with state segregation laws was under discussion.

The Illinois Central railroad, operates from Chicago to Louisiana, ordered integration of its trains and railroad stations shortly after the ICC handed down its decree.

The Deep South is continuing to rock and roll in time to the ups and downs of the tune of desegregation being played by the NAACP and accompanied by the howls of pro-segregationists.

A third bus boycott was in the making in Miami, Fla., where Negro leaders indicate that they might call for such action if segregation is not ended on that city's bus lines. The owner of the bus company is William D. Pawley, special assistant to Secretary of State Dean Acheson during the Truman Administration and former U. S. Ambassador to Brazil and Peru.

Developments last week were as follows:

1. Betty Jo Johnston of Dade City, Fla., a Fisk University co-ed, refused to move from her seat in a Greyhound bus "white section" until the bus driver pleaded for her to move so the vehicle could leave the Birmingham, Ala., bus station.

2. The City Transit Commission of Tallahassee is seeking to discontinue their routes which feed the predominately Negro areas of the town in face of boycott pressure.

3. The City Commission of Delray Beach, Fla., has asked the state legislature to rule the Negro part of town as being "outside city limits." Negroes are pushing for the right to swim at public beaches.

4. Negro citizens of Sarasota, Daytona Beach, Pensacola, St. Petersburg, Tampa and Miami, Fla., are organizing for an all-out fight for full citizenship.

5. O. Z. Evers, a U. S. postal worker in Memphis has asked for police protection after a cross-burning in front of his home and a series of phone threats.

6. In Charlotte, N. C., six men, including an official of the "States Rights League" were arrested for peddling hate literature.

7. The Miami unit of the NAACP says that it will only use the bus boycott as a "last resort" to break down segregation, but the NAACP state president in Tampa states that other cities might use the boycott as a weapon.

8. The Montgomery Improvement Association, backers of the six-month-old boycott of city buses, has been incorporated as a non-profit organization.

9. Roy Wilkins spoke in Jackson, Miss., and called "meet white Southerners . . . bewildered, frustrated and defiant, when this system is challenged."

10. A white parent who joined in the NAACP suit against the Arlington, Va., School Board has been receiving obscene phone calls.

11. One thousand Alabamans have joined the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights which was established at a Birmingham mass meeting.

12. A six-foot cross was burned in front of the home of Dr. Ralph M. Wimbish in St. Petersburg, Fla.

13. In Charleston, S. C., a white citizens council leader is seeking to have a third party placed on the ballot in November.

14. Mobilians are planning to form a new organization since the NAACP has been outlawed in Alabama.

15. The White Citizens Council has organized a chapter in Washington, D. C.

16. Knoxville's civic and community leaders are mapping plans to prevent any new racial outbreaks in the Tennessee town.

17. The Tennessee State Legislature has been asked to ban the NAACP in a "special session."

18. Four Negro students have registered for summer classes at East Tennessee State College's grad school.

19. In Galveston, Tex., the integration of city schools by September has been advised by a special citizens committee which has been studying the problem.

Bus Stop

Mon. 6-11-56

There were only two empty places on the City Transit bus in Tallahassee when the two coeds from Florida's all-Negro A. & M. University stepped aboard. Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie Patterson, 20, sat down—in a long seat for three in the front of the bus, already occupied by a white woman. Driver Max Coggins ordered them to move to the back of the bus, where there was standing room only. The two women replied that they would prefer to get off and asked to have their fares refunded. Impossible, said Coggins. In the ensuing stalemate, Coggins drove to the nearest service station, called the police, and the coeds were arrested, charged with "placing themselves in a position to incite a riot." They were released on $25 bond.

Dayton, Ohio

P. 34

The incident in itself was irritating enough to A. & M.'s student body of 2,600. But it took on an uglier aspect the next night when a crude cross was left burning in the yard of the house where the two young women boarded.

The following morning, student-body president Broadus Hartley called for a mass meeting in the campus auditorium. Almost to a person, the students turned out and, amid cheers, resolved to stop riding the buses. "They just didn't want to be humiliated any more," said Hartley.

'We'll Walk': When the next bus for the downtown area passed through the campus, students waved it on, and some shouted: "We'll walk." A moment later, a police car followed, but this, Chief Frank Stoutamire explained later, was just a coincidence.

Within 24 hours, the boycott movement was spreading fast to the rest of Tallahassee's Negro population (more than one third of the total population of nearly 40,000). Although the charges against the two coeds had been dropped by then, a group of Negro ministers and other civic leaders took up the fight. "It's a matter of principles, not personalities," said one of them, the Rev. J. Metz Rollins.

As the boycott quietly widened last week, the nearest thing to an "incident" was the arrest of the Rev. C.K. Steele, a Negro, for passing a stop sign while transporting passengers in his car. "Strictly routine," police said, but the Reverend Steele declared he would fight the case.

By the end of the week, the boycott, then in its seventh day, was close to 100 per cent effective, and the privately owned bus company, which only two weeks ago had reported that it was losing money (with a view to a rate adjustment) was not taking the boycott lightly.

Montgomery's Troubles: The protest in Florida's capital generally paralleled that in Alabama's capital, Montgomery, which lies 175 miles northwest of Tallahassee. In Montgomery (population, 120,000, of which about 50,000 are Negroes), the widely publicized boycott entered its seventh month last week, with the normal daily load of 30,000 to 40,000 Negro passengers reduced to between 300 and 400. The determination of the boycotters had evidently not been sapped by the indictment of 90 of their leaders and the conviction of one, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., whose $500 fine is being appealed.

But the antisegregation movement in Alabama got a jolt on a different front late in the week. At the request of Attorney General John Patterson, who accused the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People of organizing and financing the boycott, Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones ordered the NAACP to halt all activities within the state until further notice. Although NAACP officials denied responsibility for the boycott, they promised to abide by the injunction, while their attorneys study it further.

Round Two On Bus Segregation

Chicago, Ill.

A Federal District Court in Montgomery has ruled the state laws on segregation in intra-state travel as invalid. The ruling probably covers the laws in other states which require separation of the races.

If so, this clears up the confusion resulting from the recent action of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Sarah Fleming vs. The Carolina Coach Co. when the high court refused to review the appeal of the bus company against a lower court decision which had upheld Miss Flemings petition against segregation.

At first, this decision was widely heralded as meaning the court had decisively barred segregation in travel; but after legal experts had gone over the material, it was found that the question was still up in the air.

Some Southern cities moved right ahead with integration, namely, Richmond, Norfolk, and Portsmouth in Virginia. Not so in Montgomery where the city commissioners said they would arrest anybody who disobeyed the local regulations.

Thus, the Montgomery bus boycott was given further impetus and the stubborn unyielding of the city only widened the breach between the races. With business steadily falling off, we wonder now how long the decent white people will let the bigots speak for them and hurt them economically.

More than likely, the commissioners at the behest of the White Citizens Councils will come up with some kind of interposition to overrule the Federal District Court.

This kind of defiance is going to inevitably end in some law enforcement officer running head on into the law and leaving himself open for prosecution.

Perhaps then, it will be showdown time on who will prevail.

Fri. 6-8-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — A three-judge federal court ruled segregation on Montgomery city buses unconstitutional Tuesday, and Alabama officials announced an immediate appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The decision was hailed as "a victory for Democracy and justice" by the Rev. M. L. King, leader of the six-month protest which has kept virtually all of Montgomery's 50,000 Negroes off city buses.

The Rev. King said, however, that the "protest will continue" while the court decides whether to make its ruling effective immediately, or await appeal to the high court.

A boycott of local buses in Tallahassee, Fla., meanwhile, continued to gain supporters Tuesday, and in Memphis, Tenn., a Negro asked to leave a bus when he refused to move to the rear of the vehicle filed suit attacking that

O. Z. Evers, with legal aid from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, asked for a three-judge court in Memphis and "speedy" hearing to stop the Memphis Street Railway Co., and the city from enforcing racial segregation.

20-PAGE DECISION

In the 20-page Montgomery decision, two of the three Federal judges held enforced segregation violates the due process and equal protection clauses of the U. S. Constitution. The court invited views on the form its final decree should take, and on whether desegregation should be ordered immediately. The legal briefs are due in two weeks.

Alabama officials said they would appeal the ruling and ask that its effectiveness be postponed, predicting "racial conflict" if the color bars were let down immediately.

APPEAL PLANNED

C. C. Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, said the ruling would be "immediately appealed." He said the court would be urged to delay making the decision effective, pending the appeal, because:

"Any other action would invite racial conflict in this state."

The court, in holding enforced segregation violates the due process and equal protection clauses of the Federal Constitution, invited Negroes who brought the action, and the city, state and bus lines to submit within two weeks "views as to the form of judgment to be entered, and whether such judgment should be stayed pending appeal."

COMPLETE AGREEMENT

The majority opinion said the judges were in "complete agreement" with the verdict of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which held that segregation on buses in South Carolina was violative of constitutional provisions. That case is due for another round in the courts, after the U. S. Supreme Court referred it for further proceedings, without specifically ruling on the question of segregation in public transit systems.

The Montgomery Bus Lines had ordered an end to segregation on its buses when the Supreme Court action in the South Carolina case was held in some quarters to have outlawed segregation in buses. But it was only a gesture. City officials threatened arrest of anyone violating the segregation laws which the court struck down Tuesday. And Negroes continued a boycott against the buses which began months before when a woman passenger was arrested for refusing to move to the rear of the vehicle.

SIMILAR BOYCOTT

A similar boycott of public buses got underway in Tallahassee, Fla., last week, with Negro patrons demanding an end to segregation, more courteous treatment from drivers and Negro drivers on routes predominantly patronized by Negroes. These demands were identical with those made by boycott leaders in Montgomery.

The Alabama Public Service Commission termed Tuesday's dissenting opinion by Judge Lynn "great and learned." Judge Lynn reaffirmed the long-standing "separate but equal" legal doctrine which was upset by the U. S. Supreme Court in the school segregation cases.

"The majority opinion," Owen said, "seeks to overturn the separate-but-equal doctrine . . which has been consistently followed since 1849."

MOTOR BUSES

The 20-page decision refers specifically to "motor buses" . . . in the city of Montgomery and its police jurisdiction, apparently making it necessary for separate legal actions to make the effect of the decision applicable in other jurisdictions.

Until the Supreme Court's school segregation decision, rulings of the high court generally were accepted as legal precedent, and applicable in any similar set of circumstances. The South generally, however, has refused to accept the school ruling as applying anywhere but in the specific areas where the action was brought, making suits in each school district in the deep South region necessary before the ruling could effectively erase the traditional color line.

Tallahassee Negroes End 7-Month Bus Boycott

Montgomery, Ala.

Sun. 12-23-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Dec. 22 (UP)—Tallahassee Negroes called off a seven-month-old bus boycott today and served notice they will return to city buses in an "unsegregated fashion."

The Negro Inter - Civic Council, which sponsored the boycott in protest to segregated seating, asked the City Council today for help in "maintaining order and preventing violence of any sort as our people return to the buses in an unsegregated fashion."

City officials declined comment, but Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said he is watching the situation "closely" and will personally handle any incidents if they develop "but there have been none so far."

Mayor John Humphress said only that the City Commission "will have to get together and talk it over."

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the council and head of the local NAACP, said a mass meeting will be held Sunday night to discuss the pending return to the buses and set a date for its start. He indicated the council board will recommend protesting Negroes go back to the buses Monday and "sit anywhere they like."

Asked if the boycott was ended in order to lay the groundwork for a court test of Tallahassee's segregation ordinance, Steele said "not entirely. There is always a possibility the City Commission will be wise enough not to force any litigation. I think there is more good will here than in any town its size in the nation."

Cities Transit Manager C. L. Carter said he has had no reports from drivers of Negroes trying to sit in the front of buses or alongside white passengers which is prohibited in his city franchise. Carter said Negro riders are still "far below normal, but we have been noticing a gradual increase in the past month."

The City Commission was notified of the end of the boycott in a letter signed by Dr. M. C. Williams, local dentist and executive secretary of the Inter-Civic Council.

The letter said "in the wake of the federal court order ending bus segregation, our protest against segregated seating in cities transit buses is now ended.

"We seek your unqualified assistance in maintaining order and preventing violence of any sort as our people return to the buses in unsegregated fashion."

Negroes returned to buses in Montgomery, Ala., Friday under a court order ending segregation on buses in that city. No violence was reported.

Arrests Started Boycott

The Tallahassee boycott followed the arrest of two state Negro university coe-eds MMAY 26 for sitting beside a white passenger. The city dropped the charges but the boycott continued.

12-2-

The city repeatedly rejected council demands for fully integrated seating but the bus company provided Negro drivers on predominently Negro runs and many Negroes returned to the buses on the old segregated basis.

Sun. 12-23-56

For one month, the loss of Negro passengers which make up the bulk of bus riders here, forced the company out of business but service was restored after a campaign by the local chamber of commerce increased use of the buses by white persons.

A "car pool" operated by the Inter-Civic Council for boycotters was halted by city court order earlier this month and Steele and 20 other Negro leaders were convicted of operating an illegal public transportation system. The decision is now being appealed to circuit court.

Tallahassee Leaders Act to Bar 'Trouble'—Birmingham Group Looks to Court

New York

By The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Dec. 27—A milling group of about forty jeering white teen-agers caused Negro leaders to call off today a scheduled demonstration of desegregated bus riding.

Two hundred white persons were gathered at the main downtown transfer point when the Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of the Negroes' drive to integrate the buses, and sixteen officers and members of the Inter-Civic Council arrived to board buses. The Negroes had planned to take front seats, reserved by law for white patrons.

Although Mr. Steele and his group decided not to ride the buses, smaller groups and individual Negroes were seen riding buses in the front section during the late afternoon.

[At Birmingham, Ala., Negro leaders called off open defiance of a city ordinance requiring segregated seating on public buses. They will await the outcome of a court test on the issue.]

Mr. Steele said the teen-agers had led him to abandon the demonstration. The teen-agers, including ten girls, were garbed in jeans and windbreakers. They did not approach any of the Negroes, but jeered and voiced implied threats of violence.

Not Seeking Trouble

"We are not seeking trouble. Those young people looked as though they might mean trouble. I felt we had nothing to gain by precipitating any disturbance," Mr. Steele said.

More than half a dozen policemen were on hand, but nothing occurred to cause their intervention.

The Negro leaders have been riding the buses in seats of their own choice since Monday without interference. Today's scheduled rides drew special attention because of the action of the City Commission in suspending the franchise of Cities Transit, Inc. last night as a result of the eforts of Negroes to integrate the bus system.

Buses operated today despite the franchise suspension. The bus company took the position that the surprise suspension was illegal. Charles S. Ausley, the bus company's attorney, said the franchise was revokable only on thirty days notice.

Police Chief Frank Stoutamire arrested Charles L. Carter, general manager, on a charge of operating an illegal transportation system and nine drivers on charges of operating unfranchised buses.

Bonds of $100 were posted by each of the ten and the buses rolled away, about an hour late. The police did not interfere further, although Chief Stoutamire warned the drivers they must enforce segregated seating laws.

Birmingham Defiance Ends

By CLARENCE DEAN

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Dec. 27—Negro leaders called off tonight, pending a court test, their open defiance of a city ordinance requiring segregated seating in public buses.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttleworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, emerged at 7 P. M. from a two-hour meeting of the executive board and announced:

"Since the issue is properly one for the courts, we now believe that all purposes can be settled in the courts.

"It is not necessary for our citizens to ride unsegregated buses further at this time."

The effort actually had been suspended prior to the statement. Comparative quiet had returned to this industrial city of 330,000, where the Negroes' organized challenge of the ordinance has caused the bombing of one house and the arrest of twenty-two persons.

In contrast to yesterday, when at least forty Negroes took seats in the forward part of buses—reserved under the City Code for whites—only a handful did so today. There were no incidents, and, up to 7 P. M., there had been only one arrest in addition to the twenty-one yesterday.

Mr. Shuttleworth said that yesterday's demonstration had served its purpose and little was to be gained now by further mass action.

Two actions had been achieved, he said: "We showed we had the courage to do it," and a vehicle had been provided for getting the issue before the United States District Court.

The test here followed a Federal court order that went into effect in Montgomery, Ala., last Friday. A similar city ordinance there was declared void.

The persons arrested here were freed under $100 bonds, furnished by a near-by bail bond concern, for trial before Recorder Ralph E. Parker Jan. 3.

Lawyers here said it would be possible to go at once into Federal court and ask for a declaratory judgment that the city ordinance was void.

It was considered probable, however, that the matter would not be taken into this court until after the trial of these twenty-two, and any others who might be arrested, in the Recorder's Court.

Robert E. Lindberg, Commissioner of Public Safety, warned today the police would have to enforce the law as long as it remained in the City Code.

Yesterday's arrests were conducted in an orderly dispassionate manner—as were the deliberate violations by the Negroes.

Mr. Shuttleworth said he expected the defendants would be represented by the law firm of Arthur Shores, Orzell Billingsley and Peter Hall. They participated in the Montgomery bus segregation case. Mr. Shores has been, and is, counsel for Autherine Lucy Foster in her effort to attend the University of Alabama.

The only violence here, so far, has been the bombing of Mr. Shuttleworth's house in a Negro section of North Birmingham on Christmas night. His wife, one of his daughters, and two sisters were injured slightly.

Shots Hit 2 Buses

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Dec. 27 (AP)—Unidentified gunners fired on two city buses last night but no one was injured.

Nine .22 caliber bullets were pumped through windows of the other bus, which was empty except for the driver.

Four Negroes were riding the bus that was struck by the shotgun blast. They refused to give their names to the bus driver and left the scene before investigating officers arrived.

A City Commissioner, Frank Parks, observed that if such acts continued and someone was killed or hurt he would vote to suspend the city transit service.

Tallahassee Acts as Negroes Ignore City Law

Tues. 12-25-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Dec. 24 (AP)—The Tallahassee City Commission directed the Cities Transit Bus Co. today to enforce racial segregation on the buses.

The action came as Tallahassee Negroes ended a seven month-old bus boycott by boarding buses and sitting where they pleased.

P 3

The immediate effect of the City Commission's directive remained somewhat doubtful with attorneys for both the commission and the bus company indicating uncertainty as to what will happen in the next few days.

The bus company announced it will seek a court determination as soon as possible on whether the segregation requirements of both its franchise and of state law are valid in the light of the federal court ruling under which bus service in Montgomery, Ala., was integrated last week.

"We're in hopes that pending this decision no one will try to precipitate anything," said James Messer Jr., attorney for the City Commission.

Negro leaders rode the buses today, seating themselves where they pleased an encountering almost no opposition.

Held Prudent Move

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter Civic Council which had spearheaded the boycott as a protest against segregated seating, said his first reaction to the bus company's announcement to seek court determination in the matter is that it "seems to be a rather prudent move."

"Momentarily, I think favorably of it," he said.

Steele said he would have to confer with other council members before announcing a decision on what the Negroes will do pending a court ruling on the validity of segregation requirements.

Charles Ausley, attorney for the bus company, said some "careful legal research" will have to be made before he advises the transit firm on what steps it should take.

Asked specifically what will be the results if Negroes continue riding in unsegregated fashion, both Ausley and Messer said they didn't know.

Little Opposition Seen

Messer said city police have been given no specific instructions on the matter.

Most buses were nearly empty Monday with state capital offices and the white and Negro state universities closed for the holidays.

Only two incidents were reported. Manager Charles Carter of the Cities Transit Bus Co. said he pulled a white photographer off one bus as he attempted to take pictures of Negroes seating themselves.

Bans Bus Pictures

Ken Butcher of Radio-TV Station WMBR, Jacksonville, said he was the cameraman. Butcher said, "Carter grabbed my camera but I wasn't pulled off the bus. Carter said 'You can take what you want outside but you can't take any pictures on my bus.'" He said he got no interior shots.

Carter had banned pictures aboard the buses on the ground they might be embarrassing to white passengers.

The Rev. J. Metz Rollins, treasurer of the Negro Inter Civic Council which has spearheaded the bus boycott, reported he and Dan Speed, also a Council officer, were asked by the driver to move to the rear of a bus they were riding.

Rollins said he and Speed did not reply but did not move. The driver made no further attempt to make them give up their seats.

Negro Convicted in Bus Incident

Ruben W. Waverly, a Negro soldier, was given a choice of a $50 fine or 60 days in jail for public drunkeness, and given a six-month probationary sentence for using obscene language in front of a woman.

According to Fred Edwards, a Columbus bus driver, Waverly got on the bus and took a seat beside a white woman who was sitting behind the driver's seat.

Edwards said when he asked Waverly to move, he began to argue and cursed, but finally took a seat across the aisle.

Miami Negroes to Await Ruling

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 24 (AP)—Miami Negroes were advised by their leaders Monday to take no action to force immediate integration on city busses.

"We are telling our people not to do anything until our federal court suit is disposed of," said G. E. Graves Jr., attorney for the Miami branch of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People."

The directive was prompted by a move taken by Negroes in Tallahassee, who ended a seven-month bus boycott Monday by riding busses "in unsegregated fashion."

"We aren't going to do like the Tallahassee people," said Rev. Theo R. Gibson, local NAACP president. "We don't want a gentleman's agreement. We want the courts to decide. Until then we aren't going to ask anybody to break the law."

Graves said the NAACP suit challenging the validity of Florida's bus segregation laws will be heard in federal court here Jan. 3.

Woman Reported Beaten in Montgomery

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Dec. 24 (AP)—An unidentified Negro woman was beaten by several white men this afternoon after alighting from a city bus newly integrated by federal court order.

The extent of her injuries wasn't known. Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal said officers were unable to learn her name.

Ruppenthal said a 15-year-old Negro girl, identified as Ollie Mae Collins, told investigating officers she was standing near the bus stop and saw "five or six men" in two cars attack the Negro woman as she left the bus.

The officers, D. W. Mixon and F. B. Day, quoted the girl as saying the men jumped back into the cars and sped away after the attack.

A white man who said he was riding the bus but declined the use of his name told newsmen he saw the woman on her knees on the pavement with upraised arms trying to protect herself.

Negroes Ride in White Seats —City Orders Company to Enforce Bias Rules

Newyork. Dy

By The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Dec. 24—Negroes rode city buses in Tallahassee today, seating themselves where they pleased and encountering almost no opposition.

Almost immediately, the Tallahassee City Commission directed the Cities Transit Bus Company to enforce racial segregation laws.

The immediate effect of the commission's directive remained in doubt. The bus company announced it would seek a court decision on the validity of the segregation requirements of its franchise and of state law in the light of the United States Supreme Court ruling barring segregation on buses in Montgomery, Ala.

The end to a seven-month-old boycott, called to protest segregated seating, came at a time when this state capital's buses were almost empty. State offices and the white and Negro state universities were closed for the holidays.

Photographer Restrained

Only two incidents were reported. Charles Carter, manager of the bus company, said he had pulled a white photographer off one bus as the latter attempted to take pictures.

Ken Butcher of radio-TV station WMBR of Jacksonville said he was the cameraman. He said "Carter grabbed my camera but I wasn't pulled off the bus. Carter said, 'You can take what you want outside but you can't take any pictures on my bus.'"

Mr. Carter banned pictures aboard the buses on the ground they might embarrass white passengers.

The Rev. J. Metz Rollins, treasurer of the Inter Civic Council, which led the bus boycott, reported he and Dan Speed, also a council officer, had been asked by the driver to move to the rear of a bus.

Take Front Seats

Mr. Rollins said he and Mr. Speed had not replied and had not moved. The driver made no further attempt to make them give up their seats, he said.

A vulgar remark insulting to Negroes was written in pencil on a bench at the point where many Negroes boarded buses.

Most of the Negroes who took seats toward the front of buses were council officers, who spent the day riding first on one route and then on another. Some of the buses on which they rode were empty except for themselves.

"The drivers were very nice and so was the bus company manager," the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the council, said.

Mr. Steele said the bus company's plan to seek a court ruling "seems to be a rather prudent move."

James Messer Jr., attorney for the City Commission, said the police had been given no specific instructions on today's action by the Negroes.

Tallahassee Negroes have been warned by their council not to engage in violence, to "turn the other cheek" if disputes arise and to ignore oral abuse. They have been guaranteed legal assistance by the council if necessary.

The boycott began here May 26, after two Florida A. and M. University co-eds were arrested for taking front seats in a bus. Charges against the Negro students were dropped but the boycott was continued.

Miami Test Awaited

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 24 (AP)—Miami Negroes were advised by their leaders today to take no action to force immediate integration on city buses.

"We are telling our people not to do anything until our Federal Court suit is disposed of," G. E. Graves Jr., attorney for the Miami branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said.

He said the suit would be heard in Federal Court Jan. 3.

It asws that the Miami Transit Company be enjoined from complying with city and state segregation laws.

New Tests Loom on Bus Segregation Laws In The South Despite Supreme Court Ruling

Beach Dispatch P.I. Oklahoma City

WASHINGTON—(ANP) — Further legal maneuvering by Southern states to delay an end to segregated seating on buses seemed likely this week despite the ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court that separate accommodations for white and Negro passengers is a violation of the U. S. Constitution.

Ans. 11-23-56

The high court's decision knocked out segregation on buses in Montgomery, Ala. — setting the precedent for all buses everywhere, within every state.

Immediately after the decision was handed down, several states indicated their laws against racial mixing on public transportation would have to be tested in separate court action and, pending such tests, segregation would be continued on buses.

In unanimously affirming a decision by a special three-judge U. S. district court in Alabama, the Supreme Court left no doubt that it considered laws seeking segregation on public buses to be unconstitutional.

Earlier this year, the court simply dismissed an appeal by a South Carolina bus company from a U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals decision that the state's bus segregation law was invalid.

This action let stand the appeals court decision, but led to confusion as to the Supreme Court's intent.

The decision last week was instigated by a situation arising in Montgomery, Ala., where the majority of Negroes refrained from using buses since December 5, 1955, due to racial segregation.

The suit was brought against members of the Alabama Public Service Commission by four Negro women who had either been required by the bus driver or by the police to comply with segregation laws, and had been arrested and fined for refusing to do so.

These women—Aurelia S. Browder, Susie McDonald, Claudette Colvin and Mary Louise Smith—filed the suit for the purpose of testing the constitionality of segregation laws in the State of Alabama and the ordinances of the City of Montgomery.

The District court found that separate accommodations, even though they are equal, violate the 14th Amendment of the Constitution.

The case was appealed to the Supreme Court which affirmed the decision of the lower court.

The high court based its bus decision on previous rulings abolishing segregation in public schools, in public parks and golf courses.

Since the original bus case was filed, the city ordinances of Montgomery were forced against Rosa Parks, who was evicted from a bus in that city and subjected to police action. Her conviction in the municipal court was appealed to the Circuit Court of Montgomery, County, Ala., where it was pending at the time the original case was brought to the Supreme Court.

The high court ruling this week wiped out the last vestige of legal segregation from public facilities in this country.

Eight other states — Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Texas — have similar bus segregation laws.

Ans. 11-23-56

The Supreme Court ruling has no bearing on private companies, which still may make their own segregation rules.

Within 24 hours after the decision, rejoicing Negroes participating in the montgomery protest held a meeting and voted to call off their 11-month-old boycott.

Their action came a few hours after a federal court declined to interfere with a state injunction against their use of a car pool to furnish transportation for boycotters.

An estimated 10,000 Negroes attended the church mass meetings in Montgomery, at which time they agreed to start riding the buses again as soon as the Supreme Court's decision is put into effect and the buses are desegregated.

The Rev. Martin Luthed King, leader of the Montgomery Improvement Association, an organization supporting the boycott, was applauded loudly when he told listeners "We will continue to walk or share rides with friends."

King termed the Supreme Court ruling "a glorious daybreak to end a long night of enforced segregation in public transportation."

The car pool, which has transported the estimated 50,000 Negro riders since last December, was ended under a state court injunction.

Negro boycott leaders sought an order in federal court to stop the city's interference with the motor pool operations, but federal Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr. refused to issue an injunction.

J. H. Bagley, manager of the Montgomery bus company, said the firm has lost more than $650,000 in fares during the past 11 months because of the Negro protest.

Bagley added, however, that his drivers will continue to enforce segregated seating until a state injunction requiring it is dissolved.

GENERAL

Brownell said he called attorneys from those states where bus segregation laws still exist to the meet December 10. The attorneys were ordered to bring copies of their now defunct bus segregation laws.

Brownell said laws in 14 southern states "must be regarded as a dead letter," as he summoned U. S. attorneys to the Washington conference to seek ways "to secure observance of the United States constitution and laws by the carriers and all others."

Brownell's expressions on transit segregation came as the U. S. Supreme Court turned down a request from Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott leaders to make l[illegible] Tuesday's Supreme Court decision effective immediately. Without the court's special action, refused today, the decision cannot become applicable in Alabama for 21 days.

The U S. Atty. Gen. said the Supreme Court decision in the Montgomery case made it "clear" that state laws requiring segregation on carriers are invalid.

He included in his call fo rthe Federal conference the observation that "anyone who commands, induces, procures, counsels, aids or abets the carrier in the commission of any such crime is equally guilty."

The federal officer declared that under the Supreme Court's ruling "state statutes and local ordinances requiring segregation of the white and colored races on common carriers of passengers violate the due process and equal protection" provisions of the constitution.

Call by Brownell

Last week the newly elected Eisenhower administration, securely in the executive saddle for the next four years, moved into the explosive bus situation. Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. summoned a Washington conference for Dec. 10 of U. S. Attorneys from fourteen Southern and borderline states. The purpose is to discuss ways to implement "the United States Constitution and its laws." Mr. Brownell cautioned in his invitation that it was "clear" that future disregard of the Supreme Court's decisions would constitute "a crime against the United States."

Three days later the liberal wing of the Democratic party, sensitive to the civil rights situation, also reacted. Six Southern Democratic Senators proposed to curb the South's biggest weapon in the Senate—the filibuster—by introducing a revision of rules to permit limitation of debate by a simple Senate majority instead of the present two-thirds majority. Backers of the proposal claimed this would checkmate the Southern threat to bottle up civil-rights legislation through a talking marathon. Yesterday they were supported by two liberal Republicans, Case of New Jersey and Ives of New York. But the chances of the proposal's acceptance were exceedingly slight. Southern Democrats could easly organize a filibuster against the rule-changing motion itself.

World

Birmingham Ala.

WASHINGTON — Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., Monday declared bus segregation law void, and called a conference of U. S. attorneys from 14 states to consider ways to bring to an end segregation on all carriers.

Ans. 11-24-56

In his summons the federal officer pointed that in the light of the highest court's decision, any person, corporations or local governments that abet bus segregation in any way are "equally guilty" with their actions constituting "a crime against the United States."

The United States Attorney general said the one dav conference will take up those measures most appropriate for the Justice Department to take to "secure observance of the Constitution by the carriers and all others."

An earlier letter to U. S. attorneys had held that "a number of states counties, municipalities and other agencies of local government had adopted discriminatory measures.

"It is now clear that any such law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter."

DESEGREGATION ON BUSES PRESENTS LEGAL PROBLEMS

Conference of Federal Attorneys Called To Tackle Questions of Procedure

By LUTHER A. HUSTON

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24—The Department of Justice set foot upon a thorny path this week when it began mapping a drive to end racial segregation in intrastate transportation.

Officials of the department are aware of the difficulties sure to be encountered in trying to enforce judicial rulings that separation of passengers by race on common carriers violates the due process and equal protection of the laws clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The drive is very much in the preliminary stages now and starts with no preconceived plan of action.

The first step was taken by Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. when he called a conference of Federal district attorneys from fourteen states to meet here on Dec. 10.

Thirty-four field men were asked to attend the conference. They come from states that have unrepealed statutes and local ordinances requiring segregation of passengers on buses or other forms of public transportation.

Purpose of Parley

Mr. Brownell said that the purpose was to consider measures the Justice Department might take to insure observance of Federal laws and Constitutional decisions of the courts. The conference will deal only with the transportation phase of the segregation problem.

One of the first problems the Government lawyers will face is the extent to which segregation laws are enforced in the states that still have them on the statute books. Maryland, for instance, is one of those states, but segregation on buses and other forms of transportation in the Free State has been virtually non-existent for some time. In Alabama, on the other hand, determined efforts to enforce it brought about the Supreme Court ruling that the Justice Department feels outlawed segregation in transportation everywhere.

The High Court upheld a decision of a three-judge Federal district court that a state law and a Montgomery city ordinance, and the regulations promulgated under them, requiring separation of bus passengers on the basis of color, deprived Negroes of the equal protection of the laws.

In his letter to the district attorneys, Mr. Brownell said that "it is now clear that any such law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter."

Unrepealed Laws

One of the first questions that arises is who can the Government put in jail for requiring segregation of passengers on common carriers? That, again, will depend on a variety of circumstances.

Prosecution will be undertaken chiefly under two provisions of the United States Code. Section 241 of the code covers conspiracy to deprive citizens of their rights. This is a felony and the maximum penalty is $5,000 fine and ten years' imprisonment.

Section 242 provides penalties for action "under color of law" to deprive any inhabitant of any state, territory or district of privileges or immunities protected by the Constitution or laws of the United States. Violation of this section is a misdemeanor, punishable by a $1,000 fine or year in prison, or both.

The weapons of punishment for contempt of court would be available only if a specific court order were ignored. In the Montgomery bus case, for instance, contempt action could follow if the parties involved did not comply with the judicial mandate. A judicial order directed to the parties is prerequisite.

Conspiracy Charge

Under Section 241 a conspiracy might be charged if the evidence indicated collusive action by public officials, transportation companies and individuals to maintain bus segregation. Participants in the conspiracy could incur heavy penalties.

Lawyers know, however, that criminal conspiracy is hard to prove. That is one thorn in the pathway. It is to be expected, therefore, that the Justice Department will not proceed under that section unless it has what it regards as a water-tight case.

"Under color of law" is the most likely basis for prosecutions. There again there are obstacles. The law is specific that there must be "willful" deprivation of rights.

So a problem is to determine when an action is "willful." A bus company might have signs pointing to one section of the bus as reserved for white passengers and another as set aside for Negroes.

Type of Offense

If Negroes boarding a bus voluntarily took seats in the section for Negroes, lawyers question whether that would constitute "wilfull" deprivation. On the other hand, if the bus driver tried to remove a Negro who insisted on sitting in the section assigned to white passengers, that could be a "willful" offense against the law.

The landmark Supreme Court ruling in that field was the case of Screws vs. United States. This was a police brutality case and the question was whether necessary force had been used or whether there had been willful deprivation of rights. The court in effect said that an officer, to be in violation of the "color of law" clause, had first to be aware that his quarry had Constitutional rights and then consciously deprive him of them.

Probably the sharpest thorn, however, is the fact that anyone charged with a crime under the pertinent sections of the Federal code would have to be tried in the district where the crime was committed. Grand juries and trial juries would be composed of citizens who might be more in tune with local laws and ordinances than with Federal laws or policies.

In prosecutions of this sort a change of venue is not available to the Government. Defendants may request transfer of the case to another district if they fear they cannot get an impartial trial but the prosecution may not.

April 23rd Decision Of Highest Court Reaffirms "Equal Justice Under Law"; Only Delaying Action By Ante-Deluvian Element Can Postpone Date When Order Goes Into Effect; Nashville May Desegregate First In State

While Attorney Z. Alexander Looby was but mildly boasting "I told you so" some other attorneys here seemed ready to file a lawsuit, which in effect would say, "Surely, gentlemen, you all don't mean the ruling applies to our state!

The sum and substance of a new "crisis" about which there may be plenty controversy, is the decision handed down by the U. S. Supreme Court on MONDAY, APRIL 23, 1956. This should be another "red letter day" on future calendars. On this day and date, the U. S. Supreme Court in just 10 words knocked out all state laws and city ordinances that employ racial segregation in the seating of persons who ride buses operating WITHIN states or cities. Relief from this evil was given interstate passengers 10 years ago.

The city of Richmond, Va., furnished the case on which the Supreme Court rendered its sharp decision, saying in effect, "for goodness sake, stop bringing to this court lawsuits on which the court has already ruled very plainly."

EQUAL OF MARSHALL

Attorney Looby who, [illegible] it is kept, is as able a [illegible]er Thurgood Marshall, and i[illegible] edged to be by Mr. Mar[illegible], himself, files lawsuits testing the validy of old customs and traditions for the purpose of bringing about NEW traditions that square with the U. S. Constitution, predicted last fall that eventually the decision rendered by the Supreme Court on May 17, 1954 would become fully the law of the land. That decision wiped out the Supreme Court decision of 1896 which inferred that all Negroes were members of an inferior race and the doctrine of "separate but equal" was sound in dealing with them.

However, it was not a Negro lawyer who was in Washington, pleading to the 19th Century Supreme Court, to avoid misconstruing the plain provisions of the U. S. Constitution. It was Justice John Marshall Harlan, of Kentucky, a strict Constitutionalist. He said the Constitution must be construed as being "color blind" and therefore not amenable to constructions that establish racial discrimination. But back in 1896 the Court with Judge Harlan in dissentin, simplified everything ruling: "They shall take who have the power and they shall keep who can."

Attorneys Looby, Marshall and many other young colored men who have studied law in the past 50 years majored in getting the Supreme Court ot agree with the great John Marshall Harlan in his reasoning on the 14th Amendment. This the Court did on May 17, 1954. Deep down in their hearts, lawyers North and South agree with soundness of the approach Negro lawyers have made to wipe out racial discrimination by getting the Court to establish equal justice under law as a foundation stone of this republic. This the Supreme Court has done. It is only an attempt to get something out of the wreck of the old Pleassy-vs Ferguson decision and same something of anti-deluvian custom, that now causes lawyers Down South to come forward with pretenses that when the Supreme Court makes a decision, it does not always mean that it is legally enforceable in a particular community which is agin' the government.

CONTEMPT CHARGE POSSIBLE

There are persons who do not profess to know law, but who feel that a solemn warning was given states and cities on April 23. They believe the Supreme Court is getting ready to handle states and cities that show contempt toward the Court's decisions, and this may take the form of sending to jail attorneys who employ plain delaying tactics where there is no justification for doing so.

Nashville, Tenn.

There is no justification, for instance, in the local transit authority are the local bus company pretending that is not yet clear whether the ruling the Court made in a case from Virginia applies with equal force to the situation in Montgomery, Ala., or even Nashville, Tenn. It surely does. The fact that a ruling from Virginia which outlawed racial segregation on busses got to the Supreme Court on appeal from state authorities, and was dismissed as "frivilous" may prove to be an eye-opener to all who brag about how long they expect to kee pthe Supreme Court edict from being put into effect in their communities.

There is no record of Negroes resorting to delaying tactics to keep the Plessy v Ferguson decision from going into effect. Negroes have known all along that it was dangerous to show contempt for the rulings.

Of course there are some Negroes in the South who may ignore the fact that there is a thing called "due process" in matters of law. They may ignore this and begin sitting where they please before the proper instructions as to when desegregation on busses is to go into effect. But indications are that this will be at a minimum in Nashville.

Thanks to the action of Mayor Ben West, a colored citizen of Nashville is a member of the Nashville Transit Authority, in the person of Dr. E. A. Selby, secretary of the AME Sunday School Union, he is in position to help the authority take a sane position with regard to carrying out the Court order to end segregation on buses. The local bus company must obey what the authorities says, as is well known.

The transit authority can warn bus riders generally to manifest their best behavior in dress and manners in boarding and riding on busses. But riders of both races shoudl see to it that their dress and behavior generally will not be in any sense offensive to fellow-passengers: and remember that where there are RIGHTS, there are also DUTIES and Responsibilities.

HARSH DISCRIMINATION

Segregation on busses in the past, along with risgraceful bus waiting rooms have been offensive to colored customers in the past. Equally offensive have been bus company rules that have made colored passengers confine themselves to the ONE and ONLY back seat on busses even when far more than enough passengers to fill the one seat had bought tickets.

There have been times when colored customers of the bus company here have been discriminated against by being required to stand at the window and wait longer than necessary before being allowed to purchase tickets.

This has been ended, as far as the law of the land is concerned, but it remains to be seen how well agents of bus companies carry out the law.

The behavior of all concerned in this new era should be such as emphasizes the fact that the Athens of the South, in particular, lives up to its reputation of being one of the greatest religious and educational centers in the world.

A Novel Statement

Advertiser 5-4-A

HERE is a rather novel if not eccentric statement:

ATLANTA, June 5 (AP)—A Negro lawyer wants Negroes to launch a counterattack on backers of racial segregation he says are using mass communications in an effort "to divide and poison the minds of Northern whites . . ."

Dr. James M. Nabrit, Jr., secretary of Howard University [Washington, D. C.] . . . said articles by Southerners in national magazines and their appearance on network radio and television programs constitute a "dangerous course of action."

Montgomery, Ala.

In the first place, had some secretary of a white college made a speech contending that Southerners should speak up, it is questionable whether it would have received the generous space apportioned to Dr. Nabrit's speech.

In the second place, it must occur to Southerners in one more spasm of exasperation that national newspapers, magazines, radio and TV have for years made pets of Negro spokesmen.

Now that the South is bewildering the North with what they have failed to behold in their own backyards, we get a bleat like that from Dr. Nabrit.

Bleat 6-6-56

But what arrests the attention is Dr. Nabrit's testimony that the South is striking some telling blows. Northerners are neither fools nor scoundrels, they just haven't been competently informed by their papers, most of which are in hock to the ante-bellum fantasies of Harriet Beecher Stowe.

What is needed above all else is for the Southern people to put their senators and congressmen to work as engines of propaganda. They cannot be ignored and as a class they are more able than the run of the Resistance leaders. We need to get our congressmen wound up, and to dismiss our braying leadership since they weaken and embarrass the Resistance with their Tom Heflin style. Virginia, for one, is stern in its determination, but its leaders are cool and sensible; they command respect.

Negroes Crossing Bus Color Lines

By ED ROGERS
United Press Staff Writer.

ATLANTA, April 26. — Negroes timidly crossed the color line on buses for the first time in parts of the South on this Confederate Memorial Day.

While Dixie orators paid their annual tribute to heroes of the South's lost cause in the Civil War, a few Negroes farther north hesitantly sat with whites on buses.

Bus lines in Petersburg, Va., and Dallas, Tex., joined the handful that has ended observance of local segregation laws in a score of Southern cities since the U.S. Supreme Court seemingly overruled those laws Monday.

A United Press survey showed bus companies had won tacit local approval of integrated buses in more than a dozen cities scattered across North Carolina, Tennessee and Texas.

Negroes were observed sitting with whites on buses in Raleigh, N. C., for the first time yesterday. Slowly at first, and then with greater frequency, they edged toward the front during the rush hour.

In Montgomery, Ala., city and transit officials held a no-decision conference after the city's demands that the local bus company abandon its decision to desegrate Montgomery buses.

Mayor W. A. Gayle issued a statement after the session saying the city was sticking to its position—that Alabama and local statutes forbidding racial mingling on public vehicles will be enforced.

There has been no effort among the few Negroes who ride the buses to take seats in the "white.' section.

Bus Lines Desegregated In 13 Southern Cities

Operators Threatened With Prosecution In Montgomery Unless They Cancel Order

From Wire Dispatches

Operators were threatened with prosecution in the Deep South stronghold of Montgomery, Ala., embittered over a 20-week-old bus boycott by Negroes.

Both the City of Montgomery and the State of Alabama declared their own segregation laws still in effect, though the Supreme Court Monday apparently outlawed the last racial barriers in public transportation.

Other Firms Follow

Other bus firms began to follow the integration policies of National City Lines, which operates in eight Southern or "border" cities, including Montgomery, where segregation has traditionally been practiced.

The Virginia Transit Company said enforced segregation would be discontinued today on its lines in Richmond and Norfolk and "it is hoped . . . that good judgment will be used by all passengers in order to continue to maintain good relations."

Operators Instructed

Operators were instructed last night in Richmond and Norfolk to stop enforcing the State segregated-seating law.

A spokesman for Virginia Transit said the Portsmouth, Va., Transit Company also would adopt the new policy.

In North Carolina the Duke Power Company said it also was complying with the decision, but expects no great change in its bus operations at Durham and Greensboro. A spokesman said no reaction or opposition was expected by City officials at either place.

El Paso Expects No Trouble

No immediate mixed riding appeared in prospect, however, in most of the Deep South cities.

At El Paso the bus company said it had only a few Negro passengers and expected no trouble when the signs denoting the white and colored sections are removed.

Tulsa bus riders have practiced segregation informally, but the company said a change-over was expected without incident there.

Officials at Tampa and Jackson said bus segregation would continue there despite the company's statement.

Firm Told To Reverse Self

The Alabama Public Service Commission ordered National City Lines to withdraw its integration order affecting Montgomery or "suffer the consequences." City and police officials threatened to arrest bus-line officers and employees or even passengers who try to enforce integration. The Montgomery color ordinance provides up to six months in jail for violation.

Although the integration order went into effect at once in Montgomery, and signs marking the colored and white sections came down, there was no immediate mixed riding.

Negroes Meet Secretly

Organized Negroes who stopped riding the buses December 5 in protest against "Jim Crow" treatment by white drivers met secretly for 2 hours.

Their leader, the Rev. M. L. King, who has been convicted of conspiring in an economic boycott of the buses, said no action would be taken to end the boycott before another meeting tomorrow.

Only a few Negroes, who said they had not taken part in the boycott, rode buses yesterday, and they took their customary places toward the rear.

Horace Cort, a photographer for the Associated Press in Atlanta, reported that a white bus driver threatened to kill him if he took a picture as some of those Negroes boarded a bus.

Segregation on Vehicles At 'End of Legal Line'

But South's Reaction to High Court Ruling Indicates Delays in Ending Practice

By ROBERT K. WALSH

Racial segregation aboard public conveyances within as well as between States reached the end of its legal line today.

This was the general view despite angry assertions in Southern areas that a Supreme Court decision yesterday "invaded State and municipal rights and moved closer to "Federal dictatorship."

The decision directly affected a South Carolina situation but had an immediate bearing on a boycott Negroes in Montgomery, Ala., have staged since December against a segregated city busline. The bus company ordered an end to the segregated system today.

The speed and extent of compliance with the Supreme Court's action nevertheless remained uncertain in some of the 12 Southern and border States, including Virginia, with laws requiring segregation on public transportation. In any event, the high court's move seemed comprehensive enough to nullify those statutes.

NAACP Comments

It was regarded in an even broader way by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Robert L. Carter, NAACP assistant special counsel, declared the Supreme Court "made it clear beyond question that racial segregation cannot be constitutionally enforced pursuant to governmental authority in any area of American life."

Mr. Carter claimed that "the long fight to secure a body of constitutional law banning segregation has come to a successful conclusion." But he added that "the task ahead is to secure compliance with the law."

In only four words the tribunal unanimously dismissed an appeal from—and therefore left in effect—a ruling of the United States Court of Appeals in Richmond that mandatory separation of the races on instrastate buses runs contrary to the Federal Constitution.

Affects All Transportation

The unsigned opinion technically dealt with a discrimination complaint that arose in Columbia, S. C. It struck down the State's statute requiring segregation on public carriers. The court's action nevertheless left ltitle doubt that it outlaws segregation on interstate as well as intrasate transportation of all kinds anywhere in this country.

This view was promptly taken by many officials or groups which either attacked or hailed the decision. The Supreme Court was looked upon as delivering the coup de grace to the previously all-but-shattered "separate but equal" doctrine the Supreme Court established 60 years ago.

That 1896 decision in Plessy vs. Ferguson concerned a public transportation segregation case in Louisiana. The Supreme Court in May, 1954, expressly and unanimously knocked it out in the field of public education.

Legal Delays Possible

As in the problem of implementing the court's ban on public school segregation, the reaction of various State officials today pointed up the possibility of some legal delays to putting the bus de-segregation pronouncement into practical and prompt operation.

The Supreme Court spoke yesterday while several Southern law officers were at a regional meeting of the National Association of Attorneys General at Old Point Comfort, Va. Attorneys General J. Lindsay Almond, Jr. of Virginia, T. C. Callison of South Carolina, and John Ben Sheppeard of Texas, declared:

"We are not surprised in view of the trend of the Supreme Court's rulings in recent years. It is another unwarranted invasion of State and municipal rights. It simply means now that the States and cities cannot determine the type of vehicles that operate over their streets, the manner of their operation, or, that based upon the factors of health, safety and morals, that separation of the races is a proper exercise of the traditional police power of a State."

Says Georgia Will Oppose It

The first official prediction of resistence came from Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia. He denounced the decision as "another example of an overt usurpation of the liberties of the people." He warned that "we shall oppose this latest decision just as we are resisting the decision in the school segregation by all legal means."

In Montgomery, Ala., however, there were signs or at least hopes that the decision might end the city bus line boycott which Negroes have carried on for five months.

In Columbia, S. C., there was a question whether Sarah Mae Flemming will be able to obtain $2,000 damages in court on a claim that her civil rights were infringed. She brought the case into court in Columbia two years ago on a complaint that a city bus driver required her to occupy a section reserved for white passengers. Officials of the South Carolina Electric Power & Gas Co., operators of the bus line and the defendant in the original complaint, did not comment immediately on the decision.

NAACP Praises Decision

Officials of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People here praised the decision as logical and inevitable. They said a formal statement would be forthcoming later from national headquarters in New York. They said 13 States, including Virginia, require segregation in transportation within their borders.

The Supreme Court's action was the tribunal's first decision which, in effect, banned public transportation segregation as a violation of the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment.

In 1946 in a Virginia case the Supreme Court banned racial segregation on public transportation crossing State lines. It said a Virginia law of that kind interfered with interstate commerce.

The Interstate Commerce Commission several months ago ordered an end to segregation in interstate trains and buses and in station waiting rooms used by interstate travelers. That ICC order has not been tested in the courts. The Supreme Court ruling yesterday, however, was widely believed to make such a test unnecessary.

Montgomery Ready To Fight In Court for Bus Segregation; Panel Votes Ike's Rights Plan

House Unit's Southerners Plan Dissent

WASHINGTON, April 25 (AP)—President Eisenhower's civil rights proposals won the approval of the House Judiciary Committee today.

The vote, taken in a closed session, was not announced. Last week, in a temporary setback for the legislation, the committee voted 14-13 to return all civil rights proposals to a subcommittee.

The proposals which were approved today were submitted by Atty. Gen. Brownell April 9. They call for:

1. A federal Civil Rights Commission.

EXPECT LAWSUITS

2. A civil rights division of the Justice department, partly because of an expected flow of lawsuits over racial integration.

3. A new law to "prevent anyone from threatening, intimidating, or coercing an individual in the exercise of his right to vote."

4. Authority for the attorney general to bring action in federal courts on behalf of any aggrieved person.

5. An end to the present requirement that remedies available in the state be exhausted before a civil rights case can be taken to federal court.

The judiciary committee junked some additional proposals by Chairman Celler (D-NY). One called for prohibition of segregation in interstate commerce.

However, the committee agreed that the legislation it approved should bear the name of Celler as the author.

BIG PUZZLE

There remained a big question whether anything would be approved by Congress at this session, but Celler and Rep. Keating (R-NY) expressed optimism about the bill's chances for getting through the House Rules Committee.

Celler said there would be a majority and a minority report; the latter presumably would be the work of Southern members. He said that when these reports are ready, in about two weeks, he would apply to the Rules Committee for clearance to the House floor.

RICHMOND, Va. — (INS) — The Virginia Transit Company, which operates city buses in Richmond, Portsmouth and Norfolk, ordered an end to enforced segregation on its vehicles late Tuesday afternoon.

TEXAS ORDER

The police crief's order came in the wake of Monday's U. S. Supreme Court decision voiding state and local laws enforcing segregation of Negroes and whites on local and intrastate busses.

Meanwhile, officials of the Dallas Transit Company, operator of the city busses, said they were awaiting a complete report of the court's decision before changing operating policies.

A spokesman for the Company said drivers of the buses will not be given any special instructions as to desegregation until after a study has been made of the Federal Courts ruling.

VIRGINIA ORDER

The order in compliance with the A. U. S. Supreme Court decision of May which held segregated seating arrangements in Columbna, S. C. unconstitutional, applies in all three cities where Virginia Transit operates.

Warren R. Pollard, President of the company, after a long conference with attorneys, announced the end of enforced segregation effective Wednesday morning. He said, "Seating in buses will be left to discretion of passengers. It is hoped, however, that good judgment will be used by all passengers in order to continue to maintain good relations.

Pattern of seating on city buses in Richmond during the rush hour this evening appeared normal. Negroes by and large boarded buses and moved to the rear seats they have always occupied under Virginia State law.

The Strange Blash Of Climaxes

World Tri. 4-27-56

While bus lines in some 13 Southern states were abolishing segregated seating of the races, Representative Carl Vinson of Milledgeville, Georgia, delivered a blistering attack on the Supreme Court, referring to it as the 3rd House of Congress.

Montgomery, Alabama, because of an extended protest on the part of its colored riders in which it not only curtailed services, but raised fares and sold transfers, possibly takes the spotlight of them all. However, Montgomery operaters while ordered to comply were threatened with prosecution if they mixed the races on the buses, as the state and city declared their own segregation laws. Meanwhile Alabama's Public Service Commissioner ordered the bus lines to replace the color sign it had dropped or "suffer the consequences."

B'ham, Ala. P. 8

The confusion is accelerated in that the operators have one order from the company and another from the Public Service Commission, each in contradiction to the other.

The Virginia Transit Company said enforced segregation would be discontinued Wednesday on its lines in Richmond and Norfolk. Operators were instructed in these cities to discontinue enforcing the state's segregated seating law.

In North Carolina the Duke Power Company said it also was complying with the Supreme Court principle.

At El Paso, Texas, the bus company said it had only a few Negro bus riders and anticipated no trouble when the signs denoting the white and colored sections are taken down.

38b General

Operators of highway buses were noncommittal on what course they will follow.

A state judge at Baton Rouge, La., ordered a permanent halt to activity of the NAACP. The permanent injunction came under a 1924 law that wiped out the Ku Klux Klan. The NAACP won admission for Negroes in the Louisiana State graduate school and then in 3 colleges in the undergraduate field. Federal judges ordered integration in the New Orleans public schools as soon as practicable.

Thus ends a running picture of the varied and swift happenings on the segregation front. All practically one day's net returns, with the suggestion that no one knows what will come on the following nightfall.

The observer is left to opine for himself as to whether segregation is on its way out as to the time the court will decide when defiant declarations will actually become defiant.

But regardless of developments we hope all the citizens will take these changes in a calm manner.

Some of Dixie Obeying Law

Courier P. 3

No Bus Troubles!

Pittsburgh, Pa.

(By Courier Press Service)

Two well-dressed men challenged jim crow on Memphis' railway coaches and took seats right up front until requested to move by police, thus symbolizing the latest frontal assault upon segregation in Dixie's intrastate transportation systems.

Sat. 5-5-56

Warren G. Alexander, the bus driver, said that the pair were polite but insisted on sitting in the front seat because "they said they had paid their fare and had a right to sit where they pleased."

Later, police officers boarded the bus and requested the men to leave their seats.

THIS WAS TYPICAL of the South's reaction to the Supreme Court's most recent anti-segregation edict which, in effect, declared that jim crow was outlawed in intrastate public transportation.

The High Court edict touched off a chain reaction in thirteen Southern cities which resulted in the operators of thirteen bus lines in as many Southern towns striking down color bars and admitting all passengers to all seats regardless of color.

In Virginia, Richmond and Norfolk fell into line with the "new" policy. In North Carolina, bus operations in Durham and Greensboro began operating on an integrated basis. El Paso, Tex.; Jackson, Miss.; Tampa, Fla.; Mobile, Ala.; Tulsa, Okla.; Wichita Falls, Tex.; and Beaumont, Tex. were also numbered among the areas in which compliance with the law was expected.

In Montgomery, Ala., the now famous city-wide bus boycott of Negro riders continued as strong as ever. Here a paradoxical situation existed. Whereas, bus company officials had signified their compliance with the law, the city's "fathers" announced that they were out to see that segregation remained in force.

THE BOYCOTT continued as the wary Negro population, with boycott leaders still facing trial and the demands of the boycotters, including a request for the hiring of Negro drivers, still unanswered, continued to walk the streets with a few minor defections here and there.

In Little Rock, Ark., the NAACP indicated that it would seek the enforcement of lowered color bars on that city's bus lines.

But, in Houston, Tex., compliance was indicated by Carl Fraser, president of the Houston Transit Company, who asserted, "Whatever the decision is—or whatever the effect of the decision is—we are going to comply, because it is the right and honest thing to do."

CHARLESTON, S. C., and San Antonio, Tex., were other towns which immediately took steps to comply with the high court decision.

And, one of the two ladies who started this bus furore, Mrs. Sarah Fleming Brown, 23, whose South Carolina suit was carried to the High Court, made a rather unique observation when she asserted, "I never rode a city bus since they put me off and I never will again. I'll either ride with my husband to work or walk."

South Upset By Ruling On Bus Bigs

Defender P. 1

Sat. 5-5-56

Chicago, Ill.

The disintegrating institution of racial segregation was shaken again last week by a Supreme Court ruling which was interpreted to mean that segregation in intra-state public transportation cannot be enforced.

The ruling, which was as second in importance only to the ruling against public school segregation, caused immediate and varied reaction.

There were of course, the usual denunciations of the court by southern white leaders, and the tired old vows that integration would be accomplished only over the dead body of the South.

There was also the hesitant, "see what happens" attitude taken by many southern officials and bus companies, who seemed to feel that if they ignored the problem it would conveniently go away.

SWIFT COMPLIANCE

But, in some southern states, there was swift and decisive action to end racial segregation on city buses. Many of these cities had long ago ceased to practice strict segregation.

At week's end, this was the picture:

San Antonio became the first major southern city to become completely desegregated when city buses were added to the things where segregation could no longer be practiced. All other public facilities, including schools, were already integrated.

Three cities in Virginia—Richmond, Norfolk and Portsmouth ordered an immediate end to segregation on the buses. A similar order was issued in Dallas, Texas and Knoxville, Tenn.

BUS LINES OBEY

The National City lines of Chicago, which owns bus companies in eight southern cities, ordered immediate integration.

One of the lines is the Montgomery City lines, which has been under boycott by Negro riders for the past five months. Montgomery officials threatened to arrest anyone not obeying the city's jim crow laws.

Other cities affected by the National City lines' order are Jackson, Miss., Tampla, Fla., Mobile, Ala., Tulsa, Okla. and Wichita Falls, Beaumont and El Paso, Texas.

Chicago, Ill.

CONFUSION REIGNS

Little opposition was expected to integration in El Paso, Wichita Falls, Tulsa, but city officials in the other towns have stated they will oppose the company's move.

Generally, the ruling brought much confusion, but little change. Only in a few cities did Negro riders take the initiative and sit in sections reserved for white passengers. For the most part, the old pattern of segregated seating continued.

Southern officials who vowed to fight the latest blow against segregation found considerable comfort in the fact that most legal experts say the court's statement did not call for an immediate end to bus segregation.

THE SUPREME COURT

The Bus Bust

Time P. 36

The bulletins from Washington that were front-paged across the nation one day last week held sensational legal and social implications: the U.S. Supreme Court had ruled that segregation is unconstitutional even on buses operating within single states, on the basis of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Chicago, Ill.

That was enough to send many a major and minor Southern politician, including the governors of North Carolina, Georgia and Virginia, and the attorneys general of Texas, Virginia and South Carolina, into a spate of purple phrases. "I hereby defy the ruling [of] the Supreme Court," snapped C. C. Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission. Yet, elsewhere in the South, e.g., in Richmond, Little Rock, Dallas, many a bus driver calmly removed signs directing Negro passengers to the rear. In the North there was a crackle of excitement: newspapers front-paged the story, and editorial writers pontificated about constitutional law and the new need for wisdom and forbearance on both sides of the Mason-Dixon line.

It all added up to one of the biggest U.S. news snafus in years, triggered by a U.S. Supreme Court order so terse that the entire Washington press corps misunderstood it. "The appeal is dismissed," the Justices said, as they refused to accept an appeal of a case in which a lower court had held South Carolina's bus segregation law unconstitutional. Then the Supreme Court cryptically cited an obscure, 27-year-old Nebraska civil case, Slaker v. O'Connor, that touched off the bulletins. Actually, the only relationship between Slaker v. O'Connor and the case at hand was that both had reached the Supreme Court improperly, i.e., before being tried in lower courts.

As the last cliché died away, a sheepish realization dawned that about all the U.S. had witnessed was a demonstration of how tautly its racial nerves are stretched. There was, nonetheless, a silver lining: some of the Southern bus lines that prematurely took down their segregation signs found the new arrangement working so well that they decided to leave things that way.

Jim Crow and Buses

Times P. 2-E

When the Supreme Court made its historic decision banning public school segregation in 1954, the court opened the way for legal attacks on segregation in many fields besides education. If separate educational facilities were "inherently unequal," as the Supreme Court had said, then what about separate recreational facilities? And separate transportation facilities?

Sun. 4-29-56

New York, N. Y.

Last year, in cases involving Maryland and Georgia, the court held that segregation was unconstitutional in publicly supported golf courses, beaches, playgrounds and other recreational facilities.

Last year, also, the question of segregation in city buses went to court. In a case involving South Carolina, a Federal District Court upheld the constitutionality of laws requiring bus segregation on the ground that the old "separate but equal" doctrine was still valid. But last summer the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed this ruling. In the light of the Supreme Court's school ruling, said the Circuit Court, "We do not think the separate but equal doctrine * * * can any longer be regarded as a correct statement of the law."

Last week the Supreme Court rejected an appeal from the Circuit Court ruling. First reports gave the impression that the high court had formally banned bus segregation. This was not the case. The court rejected the appeal on technical grounds, and the case now reverts to lower courts. But the effect of its decision was to put the South on notice that it is only a matter of time before segregation in public transport is banned.

In a few Southern cities, buses were promptly desegregated. In Montgomery, Ala., where 90 per cent of the Negro population has been boycotting the buses in protest against segregation, the situation was confused. Bus company officials said the ruling had invalidated segregation, and they ordered Montgomery drivers to cease enforcing city and state segregation laws. But the city commission (whose members belong to the White Citizens Council) countered that they would "use all means available" to uphold the laws. The city commission maintains that there has been no court ruling on Alabama as yet. Next month a Montgomery Negro suit against segregation in buses will go to court. Meanwhile, last Thursday Montgomery's Negroes voted to continue their boycott until the situation has been "clarified."

U. S. Call Meet On Bus Decision

Independent P.6
Chicago Tel

WASHINGTON — (INS) — Attorney General Herbert Brownell, jr., summoned the U. S. attorneys of 14 southern states to map action for enforcing racial desegregation on buses and other public carriers.

Brownell said the action was made necessary by the Supreme Court decision last Tuesday which struck down a city ordinance requiring segregation on city buses in Montgomery, Ala.

Brownell added: "It is now clear that any law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter."

DECEMBER 10 CONFERENCE

The Attorney General asked 34 U. S. attorneys in 14 states "in which discriminatory state or local laws of this kind are unrepealed" to come to Washington Monday, Dec. 10 for a one-day conference.

Sat. 12-1-56

He explained: "The purpose of the conference will be to consider and decide upon those measures most appropriate for the Department of Justice to take to secure observance of the United States constitution and laws by the carriers and all others."

States to be represented at the conference will be Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

14TH AMENDMENT

Brownell pointed out that the Supreme Court decision in the Montgomery case held that segregation of passengers on common carriers violates the due process and equal protection of the law clauses of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution.

He added: "Anyone who commands, induces, procures, counsels, aids or abets the carrier in the commission of any such crime is equally guilty."

In Atlanta, Ga., Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said that Brownell "will have to fight every inch of the way in Georgia" to gain observance of the U. S. Supreme Court decision that bus segregation is illegal.

The Georgia attorney general said, however, that last Tuesday's decision in the Montgomery, Ala., case did not invalidate Georgia's segregation laws.

LAW SUITS NEEDED

He said Brownell, to make the decision applicable throughout Georgia, would have to bring a law suit in every county in the state.

"He'll have to fight every inch of the way in Georgia," Cook said, adding:

Independent

"Just because he says the statutes are void doesn't make it so."

In Jackson, Miss., Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson said that the forthcoming conference of U. S. attorneys to map desegregation plans on public carriers was "just another example of federal encroachment of states rights."

Patterson said:

"If the United States Attorney General had any regard for states rights, he would also seek to confer in person with state officials who are responsible for state laws."

Sat. 12-1-56

Patterson said that Mississippi has "statutes on the books" which prohibit the mixing of races on buses and other public carriers and added:

"As far as I'm concerned, they'll stay on the books."

He said:

"This (the high court ruling) is just another instance of the repeal of state laws by court decree without regard to the rights of a state as contained in the 10th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution."

In Tallahassee, Fla., Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin said bus segregation cases should be "brought by the people involved" and that the federal government should "let each case come along on its own like that of Montgomery, Ala."

Erwin said Brownell's action was "precipitant and premature."

South Carolina Atty. Gen. T. C. Callison said that if it was Brownell's intention to hint at prosecution of those who oppose putting the Supreme Court decision into effect "he may have to put all of the people of South Carolina in jail."

Callison said he would not move for compliance with the Supreme Court decision in South Carolina, and he crystalied the views of virtually all southern offcials when he said:

"I'm going to wait until we get to where we have something."

State Bus Laws Face New Attack

Herald Miami, Fla.
P. 4 A Aug. 11-20-56

WASHINGTON — (UP) — Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr. Monday called a conference of federal officers to force 14 states to scrap local bus segregation laws.

Brownell described such a local law a "dead letter" under a Supreme Court decision last Monday. He ordered U.S. attorneys from the states where bus segregation laws remain on the books to meet here Dec. 10.

BROWNELL

He said the one-day conference will consider "those measures most appropriate" for the Justice Department to take "to secure observance" of the Constitution by the carriers and all others.

The states involved are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Brownell pointed out that under the high court decision "state statutes and local ordinances requiring segregation of the white and Negro races on common carriers of passengers violate the due process and equal protection" provisions of the Constitution.

He said in a letter to the U. S. attorneys that prior to the decision "a number of states, counties, municipalities and other agencies of local government had adopted discriminatory measures."

"It is now clear that any such law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter," he stated.

The attorney general in his letter to the U. S. attorneys in the 14 states said he was "informed" of unrepealed local laws requiring segregation. He added that it would be helpful if the federal officers bring texts of any local segregation laws to the conference.

Brownell Calls Attorneys General To Dec. 10 Meeting

Kansas City, Mo.

WASHINGTON. (ANP) —U. S. Attorney General Herbert Brownell Monday called a conference of attorneys general from 14 southern states to discuss implementation of the Supreme Court's order against segregation on public buses.

Brownell set the conference for December 10 in Washington.

At the same time, he told the attorneys general that laws in their states requiring separation of Negro and white passengers are now invalid as a result of the high court's ruling.

The conference, Brownell added, will determine what action—if any—the Justice department will take in the matter of getting states to desegregate their buses.

Turns Down Request

A few hours after Brownell's announcement, the Supreme Court turned down a bid by Negro leaders of Montgomery, Ala.—the city directly involved in last week's ruling—to hasten the delivery of the court's mandate to the federal district court in Montgomery.

Lawyers for the Montgomery Improvement Association which supports the 11½-month-old Negro bus boycott, had asked that the integration order be effective im-

Brownell Calls Meeting To Enforce Integration

Montgomery, Ala.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (AP) — Atty. Gen. Brownell today summoned federal prosecutors in 14 Southern states to a Washington conference on how to carry out the Supreme Court decree against racial segregation on buses.

He set the date, in a circular letter to the 34 U. S. district attorneys in the 14 states, as Dec 10.

Brownell's letter said that it is clear from the Supreme Court decision of Nov. 13 on the Montgomery, Ala., bus segregation case that discrimination against bus passengers on account of race is "a crime against the United States."

A number of state and municipal government spokesmen in Southern states have spoken out against the cour's Montgomery ruling. Several have indicated that various state laws against mixing of races on transportation systems would have to be tested in separate court actions. They said that pending such tests, segregation would be continued on buses.

The Montgomery case was marked by a long bus boycott by Negroes.

Brownell's letter calling the Justice Department conference went to U. S. attorneys in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Brownell told them the conference "will consider and decide upon measures most appropriate to secure observance of the United States Constitution and laws by carriers and all others who may hereafter require segregation of white and colored passengers on common carriers."

The attorney general told the district attorneys to bring with them copies of state or local laws relating to racial segregation. He said the Nov. 13 court decision, which struck down Montgomery and Alabama statutes, makes it clear "that any such law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter."

"It is also clear," he added, "that the enforcement or observance of any such discriminatory measure by any common carrier of passengers will constitute in the future and in the light of the unmistakable declaration of the federal courts a willful deprivation by the carrier of the constitutional rights, privileges and immunities of those discriminated against and a crime against the United States."

Aug. 11-20-56

"Anyone who commands, induces, procures, counsels, aids or abets the carrier in the commission of such crime is equally guilty," he said.

Ben Franklin, vice president of the Montgomery City Lines, said today his company is still required to segregate passengers under the state court order which "remains in force until further direct order by the U. S. District Court."

mediately instead of waiting the 25 or 30 days normally required before the notice is sent to the lower court.

In asking the speedup of the mandate, the attorneys stated that a prompt filing of the court's ruling would permit quicker determination of four anti-segregation cases now pending in Alabama.

Filing the petition on behalf of the boycotters were NAACP general counsel Thurgood Marshall, Robert Carter of New York, Fred D. Gray and Charles D. Langford of Montgomery.

Since the Supreme Court had already declared segregation of Negro and white passengers on city buses unconstitutional, it would have required the decision of only one justice to grant the request.

To Continue Bias

Meanwhile, in Montgomery, the city commission promised to seek every "legal" means of continuing racial segregation on buses.

The commissioners announced that the ancient policy of seating Negroes from the rear and whites from the front would continue "to insure public safety, to protect the people of both races and to promote order in our city . . ."

In a statement released to newsmen, the commission said the laws "are not changed here in Alabama" by the decision of the Supreme Court.

"We recognized no immedia to resolve of the problems which our segregation laws answer . . . it is a time-proven fact that the customs, morals, habits and dignity of a citizenry can neither be established by legislative enactment, nor court decisions."

Negro leaders, however, seem confident that Montgomery buses will be integrated despite the city commission's present opposition.

But Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the Montgomery Improvement Association which has spearheaded the 11½-month-old bus boycott, indicated disappointment in the refusal of the Supreme Court to speed up delivery of the mandate to Montgomery.

He set the date, in a circular letter to the 34 U. S. district attorneys in the 14 states, as Dec 10.

Tues. 11-20-56 Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON — Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., yesterday declared bus segregation law void, and called a conference of U. S. attorneys from 14 states to consider ways to bring to an end segregation on all carriers.

In his summons the federal officer pointed that in the light of the highest court's decision, any person, corporations or local governments that abet bus segregation in any way are "equally guilty" with their actions constituting "a crime against the United States."

The United States Attorney general said the one day conference will take up those measures most appropriate for the Justice Department to take to "secure observance of the Constitution by the carriers and all others."

Brownell said he called attorneys from those states where bus segregation laws still exist to the meet December 10. The attorneys were ordered to bring copies of their now defunct bus segregation laws.

Brownell said laws in 14 southern states "must be regarded as a dead letter," as he summoned U. S. attorneys to the Washington conference to seek ways "to secure observance of the United States constitution and laws by the carriers and all others."

Brownell's expressions on transit segregation came as the U. S. Supreme Court turned down a request from Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott leaders to make last Tuesday's Supreme Court decision effective immediately. Without the court's special action, refused today, the decision cannot become applicable in Alabama for 21 days.

The U S. Atty. Gen. said the Supreme Court decision in the Montgomery case made it "clear" that state laws requiring segregation on carriers are invalid.

He included in his call fo rthe Federal conference the observation that "anyone who commands, induces, procures, counsels, aids or abets the carrier in the commission of any such crime is equally guilty."

The federal officer declared that under the Supreme Court's ruling "state statutes and local ordinances requiring segregation of the white and colored races on common carriers of passengers violate the due process and equal protection" provisions of the constitution.

An earlier letter to U. S. attorneys had held that "a number of states counties, municipalities and other agencies of local government had adopted discriminatory measures.

"It is now clear that any such law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter."

Fri. 11-30-56

NEW YORK, N. Y. The American Civil Liberties Union today hailed the announcement of Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. that the Justice Department will hold a conference with U. S Attorneys in southern states to work out methods of compliance with the United Supreme Court's decision barring discrimination in intra-state bus transportation.

The Union, in a telegram from its executive director, Patrick Murphy Malin, said the Department's action "demonstrates that leadership at the highest government lvel will not be forfeited."

"The American Civil Liberties Union is pleased to read your public announcement that U. S Attorneys will meet to consider means of implementing the United States Supreme Court decision barring discrimination in intra-state transportation. The high court's decision was in keeping with its recent rulings that segregation and discrimination are unconstitutional and have no place in American life. While there are bound to be difficulties to overcome in achieving compliance the Federal Government has an important role to play in assuring that the law is upheld. The conference you have called will provide encouragement to all those who support the court's decision. It demonstrates that leadership at the highest government level will not be forfeited."

High Court Refuses to Spur Order

Herald Tues. 11-20-56 Miami Fla

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court refused Monday to speed up its official notice that it has outlawed segregation on local buses.

Denying a plea by attorneys for Montgomery, Ala., Negroes for immediate action, the court in effect decided to treat the case in a strictly routine way.

P. 4

The plea for speedy handling actually was denied by Justice Hugo Black as presiding judge of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court.

Black, however, issued a brief statement saying he had consulted with the eight other Supreme Court justices and found them "in agreement with my views" that the request for immediate issuance of the official notice should be turned down.

As a result, the court's order probably will not be mailed until about Dec. 12. Official notices usually are mailed about 25 days after the court rules.

The official notice, when mailed, will go to members of a special three-judge U.S. District Court which struck down Alabama laws and Montgomery ordinances requiring separation of Negro and white passengers.

Attorneys for Montgomery Negroes filed their motion for quick action Saturday. They said it was "of great public importance that the opinion or order and judgment of this court issue forthwith."

Negroes in Montgomery have conducted a long boycott of buses as a protest against state and city segregation laws.

In another action Monday, the high court agreed to rule on whether a nonstriker prevented from going to his job by picketing union members may collect damages from the union.

The case grew out of a strike in the Decatur, Ala., plant of Calumet & Hecla Consolidated Copper Co., in the summer of 1951. Paul S. Russell an electrician, sued the United Automobile Workers for $50,000. He contended union pickets barred him from entering the plant from July 18 to Aug. 22.

Russell won a $10,000 damage award in an Alabama state court. In affirming the award, the Alabama Supreme Court called it not excessive and spoke of "the necessity of preventing similar wrongs."

Montgomery Negroes Lose Speedup Plea

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (AP) — Atty. Gen. Brownell today summoned federal prosecutors in 14 Southern states to a Washington conference on how to carry out the Supreme Court decree against racial segregation on buses.

He set the date, in a circular letter to the 34 U. S. district attorneys in the 14 states, as Dec. 10.

Brownell's letter said that it is clear from the Supreme Court decision of Nov. 13 on the Montgomery, Ala., bus segregation case, that discrimination against bus passengers on account of race is "a crime against the United States."

A number of state and municipal government spokesmen in Southern states have spoken out against the court's Montgomery ruling. Several have indicated that various state laws against mixing of races on transportation systems would have to be tested in separate court actions. They said that pending such tests, segregation would be continued on buses.

The Montgomery case was marked by a long bus boycott by Negroes.

Justice Black of the Supreme Court issued a statement today saying that after consulting with all other members of the court, he was refusing to order immediate issuance of the court's notice of the decision.

ASKED IT AT ONCE

Counsel for Montgomery Negroes in the bus case had asked last Saturday that the notification be sent out at once. The request came before Black in his capacity as presiding judge for the 5th U. S. Circuit Court.

Supreme Court aides said the bus case notice now may be mailed about Dec. 12. It will go to members of a special court which sat in Montgomery and handed down the antisegregation decision affirmed by the Supreme Court.

Brownell's letter calling the Justice Department conference went to U. S. attorneys in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Brownell told them the conference "will consider and decide upon measures most appropriate to secure observance of the United States Constitution and laws by carriers and all others who may hereafter require segregation of white and colored passengers on common carriers."

The attorney general told the district attorneys to bring with them copies of state or local laws relating to racial segregation. He said the Nov. 13 court decision, which struck down Montgomery and Alabama statutes, makes it clear "that any such law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter."

Atlanta, Ga. Tues. 11-20-56

"Anyone who commands, induces, procures, counsels, aids or abets the carrier in the commission of such crime is equally guilty," he said.

Officials of the City of Montgomery announced after the court decision that they would use every legal means available to continue separate seating arrangements for Negroes on Montgomery buses. They said this was required to preserve public safety and promote order.

Nonsegregated oepration was attempted last spring by the private bus company which serves Montgomery, but was dropped under a state court order.

Ben Franklin, vice president of the Montgomery City Lines, said today his company is still required to segregate passengers under the state court order which "remains in force until further direct order by the U. S. District Court."

The Supreme Court decision is subject to a 25-day delay pending a possible move for rehearing.

City officials here had previously announced they would ask the nation's highest court for a rehearing.

"We hope that the Supreme Court will reconsider its decision," the public service commission chairman said, "and render a ruling in favor of the people of Alabama."

Owen earlier issued a statement that the commission would continue to do everything within its power to preserve segregation on public carriers in this state.

Alabama and Montgomery Laws Held in Violation of the 14th Amendment

SCHOOL DECISION CITED

Case Involves Bus Company Boycotted by Negroes—Some Whites Bitter

By LUTHER A. HUSTON

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13—An Alabama law and a city ordinance requiring segregation of races on intrastate buses were declared invalid by the Supreme Court today.

The court affirmed a ruling by a three-judge Federal court that held the challenged statutes "violate the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

The Fourteenth Amendment provides that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law nor deny to any citizen the equal protection of the laws.

In upholding the lower court's judgment, the Supreme Court cited its 1954 decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools and later rulings banning racial discrimination in public parks and on public golf courses.

[Officials of several Southern states indicated they would continue to enforce bus segregation laws despite the court's decision. Segregationist leaders were bitter in their denunciations of the court and its ruling.]

'Separate But Equal'

Although only Alabama laws were involved today, the ruling was interpreted as outlawing state or municipal enactments anywhere that require separation of the races on public vehicles. It was thought to have placed a headstone at the grave of Plessy v. Ferguson.

This was a case decided in 1896, in which the high court ruled that racial segregation on railroads was not unconstitutional if separate but equal facilities were provided.

The "separate but equal" doctrine later was applied to segregation in other fields, such as education, and generally prevailed until the high court's ruling in school cases.

Since then the doctrine has been discarded in every test that has been brought to the Supreme Court.

Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Texas have laws that could be affected by today's ruling.

Last term the Supreme Court had under advisement a case from Columbia, S. C., involving a similar issue. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals had invalidated South Carolina's bus segregation law. The ruling was interpreted as applying also to bus segregation in Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina and Maryland, which are in the Fourth Judicial Circuit.

James Gray

In that case, however, the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal on technical grounds, although it did not specifically affirm or reverse the circuit court's ruling.

Today's order left little doubt that a new appeal in the Columbia case, if it again came to the High Court after procedural requirements had been complied with in the lower courts, would suffer the fate of the Alabama statutes.

Grew Out of Boycott

The ruling affirmed today grew out of a boycott by Negroes in Montgomery, Ala., of municipal buses. The boycott began last year and is continuing.

Aurelia S. Browder, Susie McDonald, Claudette Colvin and Mary Louise Smith, Negroes, had been required by bus drivers or the police to comply with segregation laws and had been arested and fined for refusal to do so.

The Montgomery City code required bus operators to provide separate but equal accommodations for white and colored passengers. A state law also required segregation.

The four women did not appeal their convictions, but brought suit to challenge the constitutionality of the city code and the state law.

A court composed of Circuit Judge Richard T. Rives and District Judges Frank M. Johnson Jr. and Seybourn H. Lynne heard the case. Judges Rives and Johnson held the challenged statutes unconstitutional. Judge Lynne dissented.

The Alabama Public Service Commission and the Montgomery Board of Commissioners appealed to the Supreme Court. They asserted that the high court never had overruled the Plessy v. Ferguson decision. They urged the court to hear the case and give a clear-cut, written opinion disposing of the issue.

The court, however, merely granted a motion of lawyers for the Negroes that the lower court decision be affirmed.

John Patterson, Attorney General of Alabama, and Walter J. Knabe of Montgomery presented the appeals of the state and municipal bodies. The Negroes were represented by Thurgood Marshall, Robert L. Carter, Fred D. Gray and Charles D. Langford.

Bus ruling is not statewide—Rives

Wed. 11-21-56

Birm. Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 21 —(AP)—A Supreme Court ruling against bus segregation applies only to Montgomery and is not automatically effective in the rest of Alabama or the South, a federal judge said yesterday.

U. S. Circuit Judge Richard T. Rives said the Nov. 13 decision that Alabama state and Montgomery city bus segregation laws are unconstitutional would set a precedent for similar cases in other places. But it will result directly in an injunction against enforcement of the laws only in Montgomery, he said.

ON MONDAY Atty. Gen. Brownell called federal prosecutors from 14 Southern states to a Dec. 10 conference in Washington to discuss how to carry out the decision. He said it made clear that racial discrimination on buses is "a crime against the United States."

The Montgomery City Commission announced yesterday it would ask the Supreme Court for a rehearing on its decision. City officials indicated privately they weren't holding great hopes of stopping a court order.

THE DECISION, affirming a three-judge panel's ruling here June 5 in which Rives participated, has not been formally communicated to Montgomery. A court attendant in Washington said that should come about Dec. 12. He gave that date before the commission said it would ask rehearing.

When notice of the decision arrives here, it will instate a now suspended permanent injunction against enforcement of the bus segregation laws in Montgomery. An attempt by leaders of the bus boycott by Montgomery Negroes, now nearing one year old, to speed up delivery of the decision was rejected Monday by Justice Black.

Today the Alabama Public Service Commission said it would join the City of Montgomery in asking for a rehearing.

Chairman Jack Owens, said the papers are being prepared by the attorney general's office to transmit to the court in Washington where they will be filed as soon as possible.

Rives said the fact that the suit decided by the Supreme Court named as a defendant the Alabama Public Service Commission and applied to its segregation laws didn't make desegregation automatic throughout the jurisdiction of the commission.

Mixing Order For Terminal Is Lacking

Constitution Fri. 1-6-56 P. 1

Atlanta officials of the Southern Railway System said Thursday night they had received no instructions regarding abolition of segregated waiting rooms at Terminal Station for interstate railway passengers.

Atlanta Ga.

This was in direct opposition to a report from a spokesman of the railroad at its Washington headquarters that the segregated waiting rooms already had been abolished.

Southern Railway officials here said they were awaiting word from Washington in the matter. One spokesman said he did not know when segregation would end at the station, explaining that no integration order had been received in Atlanta.

He added that the railway spokesman in Washington undoubtedly represented the Southern headquarters.

The Washington spokesman also said a sign designating a separate room for Negro intrastate passengers would be erected to comply with Georgia law.

Separate entrances, waiting rooms abolished in Atlanta

Herald-American Baltimore Md. Jan. 1-11-56

ATLANTA, Ga.—Racially separate entrances, rest rooms and lunch counters at the historic old Atlanta Terminal Station, long a source of irritation to colored passengers, were abolished Saturday.

The station, used by four principal railroads, the Southern, the Seaboard, the West Point and the Central of Georgia, is now open to the public without restriction.

Previously colored passenger were not permitted to enter through the front doors. They were forced into a crowded hovel entered from the side.

YEARS AGO, the station was the scene of an embarassing experience for Marian Anderson, when the Metropolitan Opera star arrived in Atlanta for a concert.

Police grabbed her as she unknowingly sought to make her exit from the station through the front doors reserved for white passengers only.

Atlanta Terminal Is Desegregated

Times Picayune New Orleans La. 1-8-56

ATLANTA, Jan. 7 (AP)—Atlanta's Terminal Station for rail passengers has begun to desegregate.

A Negro sailor took a seat in the white waiting room Friday and stayed there a long time. He apparently was unnoticed by white travelers.

A number of other Negroes passed through the white waiting room instead of using the entrance usually considered the "colored" entrance.

H. A. Debutte, president of the Southern railway system, biggest user of the station, told the Atlanta Journal the system will comply with the law and desegregate interstate travelers by the Jan. 10 deadline set in a recent interstate commerce commission order.

But, a spokesman said earlier, the railroad also will comply with Georgia law requiring segregation of passengers traveling within the state by designating a separate waiting room for intrastate Negro travelers.

Stations Here Given Copies Of Race Laws

Advertiser Montgomery Ala. 1-8-56

Copies of city ordinances requiring separate restaurant and toilet facilities for whites and Negroes were delivered to bus and train stations yesterday by Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal.

Ruppenthal, acting on orders from Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers, delivered the typewritten excerpts personally to the L & N train station and to Greyhound and Trailways bus terminals.

CHECK MADE

Meanwhile, Sellers said he and city attorneys have not determined whether segregation provisions of the City Code are directly applicable to waiting rooms.

"We are checking to find out if separate seating facilities in waiting rooms are required by law," Sellers said. "If they are, they too will be enforced."

The search of city laws was begun when the Interstate Commerce Commission ruled that companies engaged in transporting interstate passengers must abolish separate facilities for the races.

Signs designating separate waiting rooms already have been removed at local train stations as rail officials indicated they would comply fully with the ICC order.

Stations Comply With ICC Desegregation

Daily World Tues. 1-10-56

Atlanta's two railway passenger stations were preparing to "literally comply" with the ICC's ruling against interstate segregation yesterday, but pointedly were not going any further than law required.

P. 7

Signs, which designated waiting rooms as "Colored" and "White" were taken down Monday morning to meet a Tuesday morning deadline required by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Atlanta Ga.

But the president of the Atlanta Terminal Co., who identified himself as Mr. Bondurant explained that while signs demanding interstate travel segregation have been taken down, other demanding intra state travel segregation were being put up.

Bondurent said that a sign reading "Colored Intrastate Passengers" had been placed at the door of the former colored waiting room at the Terminal Station.

"We have removed all signs," Bondurant said. "We are literally complying with the ICC's ruling."

This new sign, in effect will open the doors of the main waiting room to Negro passengers who are traveling out of the state, but close them to Negro passengers traveling only in Georgia.

With the dual ticket offices set up here, a Negro passenger will not be able to buy a ticket unless following this split ruling, it became apparent.

Signs had been removed at the Union Station, but spokesmen there refused to comment, other than Bondurant, who is president of the Atlanta Terminal Co., is sole spokesman for both station.

Apparently the Union Station will follow the same practices of the Terminal Company, but feeling there Monday appeared slightly sharper than at the other Station

An unidentified ticket collector was apparently making special attempts to be harsh to Negro passengers who asked questions of him. An unofficial report said that a Negro was put out of the Union Station main waiting room after he attempted to enter. A Negro sailor sat in the waiting room at the Terminal Station, however without incident, it was learned.

Station Waiting Rooms Integrated Here

Constitution 1-8-56

Compiled From Wire Reports

Developments on the segregation front were many and varied Tuesday in the Southern States.

In Atlanta, segregation signs were removed at the Terminal Station and Union Station. At the Terminal Station, a Negro woman who identified herself as Lurlene Barber of West Point, Ga., sat in the former all-white waiting room. Her presence caused no excitement.

Atlanta Ga.

At the Union Station, a Negro man sat for an hour and a half in the former all-white waiting room. However, an attendant at the station said several Negro travelers inquired which was the "colored" waiting room and took seats in the old segregated area.

Tuesday marked the deadline for carrying out the Interstate Commerce Commission's directive to tear down "white" and "colored" designations on waiting rooms at railway and bus stations.

Wed. 1-11-56

But Gov. Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana ordered all state, parish and municipal officials to continue rigid enforcement of state laws requiring separate facilities for the races at such stations.

Neighboring Mississippi also resisted the order, but less dramatically. In Jackson, the capital, railroad and bus officials had taken down the white and colored waiting room designations, but city officials replaced them with their own under local segregation laws. Similar action was taken in other Mississippi cities.

In Birmingham, Ala., the Louisville and Nashville Railroad discarded segregation rules at its stations without incident.

But as at Hattiesburg, Miss., an intrastate waiting room for Negroes was designated at the Terminal Station in Birmingham. Similar action was taken at Charlotte, N.C., and Greenville, S.C.

At Savannah, all segregation signs were removed from the Union Station.

At Columbus, Negro citizens presented a petition to the City Commission asking that they be allowed to play golf on the Lions Municipal Golf Course.

At Columbia, where the South Carolina General Assembly is in session, a resolution offering interposition was presented to the House. It was referred to the Judiciary Committee. The resolution would declare null and void the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling that school pupil segregation is unconstitutional.

Seeks To Take Charters From Non-Bias Cities

Daily Worker Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 1-19-56

By International News Service

City charters of Atlanta and other Georgia towns that might permit racial de-segregation would be revoked under a bill submitted to the State Legislature Wednesday.

Rep. C. N. Jordan, Jr., of Wheeler County said Atlanta's recent decision to de-segregate its Municipal Golf Courses "might have been different if we had already passed a law like this."

Atlanta took the action on orders of the U. S. Supreme Court.

Jordan's bill provides that "in the event that segregation of the white and colored races is not maintained in any facilities of any municipality in the state . . . The charter of such municipality shall stand revoked."

It lists such facilities as Golf Courses, Parks, Auditoriums, Libraries, Athletic Fields, Swimming Pools, Tennis Courts and Playgrounds.

The bill was sent to the state republic committee.

In Atlanta's case, some pro-segregationists suggested that the city sell or lease its gold courses to private operators to avoid integration, but Mayor William Hartsfield pointed out there is no legal authority for taking such action.

Negro's Home In Disputed Area Blasted

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Sat. 3-10-56

A dynamite blast early Friday damaged a house at 215 Flora Ave., NE, which had been rented to a Negro family, police said.

The blast damaged the porch, broke the front door glass and damaged the foundation.

Ernest Simomns, Negro, moved into the house two months ago. Detective Supt. Glyn Cowan said trouble had developed in the area —which adjoins white and Negro sections—six months ago.

Sol. Gen. Paul Webb said his office is investigating reports of violence in Atlanta resulting from the sale of homes in white areas to Negroes, and added a special committee of the Fulton grand jury will hear testimony Monday from eight white persons.

The Dixie Hills Bus Comes Through

Daily World Sat. 2-4-56 P. 6

That powerful community of fine homes and wholesome enterprise which sprang up like magic on the westside and to somehow acquire the name — Dixie Hills, is jubilant over the fact that a long struggle for bus line transportation became a reality with the beginning of February.

Where patrons formerly acquired transfers to wait on corners for the feeder bus to come along, they can calmly keep their seats and ride on through with one fare effort. They no longer endure the confused condition of having to scramble through crowded areas for standing room in an effort to get to and from home, market or work. Those responsible for this reality are in for an ovation, while the patrons are ever grateful.

This community has come a long way up the ladder of modern convenience and that consideration due those who pay fares for poor accommodations.

Many of the pioneer residents will recall when one had to get from the nearest car stop the best he could; how little feeder station wagons were the first transportation facilities available and how finally an enterprising citizen devised a mean of bus transportation with broken schedules and uncertain journeys. From these came more modern facilities and regulated schedules.

Property values and home environment are greatly enhanced while little by little the proud westside is gradually coming into the heritage of its deservedness.

With the new Citizens Trust Co. bank and the new Station Post Office, and surrounding hospitals and business and office establishments there might come at last the lost link ,that fire station we have heard so much about. Bully for the Westside.

Georgia Set To Resist High Court Bus Ruling

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Wed. 4-25-56

ATLANTA, April 21 (AP)—The sweeping U.S. Supreme Court edict against racial segregation on public buses operating within as well as between states apparently had no effect at all in Georgia today.

State, city and transportation officials were quick to note that yesterday's ruling was on a South Carolina appeal, to which Georgia was not a party. Hence, they reasoned, it will impose no compulsion in Georgia until an action is brought in this state.

Among those taking this view was Gov. Marvin Griffin, who pledged himself to resist the ruling at all odds. He called it "another example of an overt usurpation of the liberties of the people."

No reported efforts were made to break down segregation in buses in Atlanta, Macon, Augusta, Savannah or any other Georgia city. Operators of highway buses, such as the Greyhound system, generally were non-commital on what course they will follow.

The Greyhound manager in Atlanta, R. F. Robinson, along with others, pointed out that he had the state segregation laws to consider. He suggested that these laws and the contradicting federal decree left him in a quandary.

Cook Would Make Enforcing Integration a Capital Crime

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 4-26-56 P. 1

Georgia Atty. Gen. Cook said Wednesday that he will recommend enactment of a Georgia law to make it a capital offense for any public official to assist the federal judiciary in enforcing the U.S. Supreme Court's desegregation rulings.

In view of the high court's decision outlawing segregation on buses in a South Carolina case, Cook said the State of Georgia will be "defenseless" if a bus desegregation case is filed in this state.

However, Cook suggested that Gov. Griffin could maintain segregation on buses in Georgia by declaring limited martial law and calling out the state militia (National Guard) to seize and operate transit companies and bus lines.

The governor would have not only the right but the duty to take such action under the police powers vested in him to protect the public interest in the event of a threat of riot or mob violence, Cook said.

The attorney general warned that there could be violence and bloodshed in Georgia if attempts are made to enforce integration in schools or on buses.

"We have seen violence happen in Detroit and Chicago and in the State of Alabama in recent weeks," he said.

Meanwhile, Georgia's transportation segregation laws are still in effect and the Supreme Court ruling in the South Carolina case is not applicable to this state, Cook said.

But if a bus case is filed in Georgia, there is nothing the state could do in federal court but fight it by defensive pleadings and seeking delays by appeals, Cook said.

BUS CASE

This, he said, is because in the South Carolina bus case the Supreme Court completely overturn the historic Plessy vs. Ferguson doctrine, enunciated in 1896 by the Supreme Court, that permitted separate but equal transportation facilities.

"If such action is brought in Georgia, we are defenseless," he said. "There are no factual or legal means we can take. We can't stop operation of the buses and the whole matter would depend on the operators themselves."

The state would have one recourse and that would be the governor's use of his powers to declare limited martial law and seize the buses and operate them, the attorney general said.

METTER TALK

Cook said he will outline in a speech at Metter Thursday night his proposal for a law to make it a capital offense (penalty of death or life imprisonment) for any Georgia public official or individual not in the federal employ to assist in enforcing the Supreme Court's desegregation rulings.

He said U. S. marshals now depend largely on services of county sheriffs to incarcerate persons charged with violating federal law. The federal government has only one penal institution in Georgia — the penitentiary in Atlanta.

If the Legislature were to enact the law Cook proposes, no sheriff or policeman could assist in arrest or jailing of any bus driver or any school trustee charged with contempt of a federal court in an integration case.

President Eisenhower and potential presidential candidates have said they are not in favor of using federal troops to enforce desegregation, Cook said. Enforcement would be up to the Department of Justice and the federal government would have to build jails in Georgia and hire an army of marshals, he said.

Cook claims Ga. has no JC bus laws

The American Sat. 12-1-56 Baltimore, Md.

ATLANTA — Attorney General Eugene Cook of Georgia week declared that the state has last week declared that the state has no laws on bus or street car segregation, but does have laws requiring segregation in waiting rooms.

He and several other southern officials joined in agreement in denying that state bus segregation laws are "dead letters" as stated by U.S. Attorney General Herbert Brownell.

Cook contended that Georgia laws could not be voided without suit being brought to have them so declared.

Attorney General Richard Ervin of Florida said Mr. Brownell made a mistake in calling a conference of U.S. attorneys and Joe Patterson of Mississippi called the parley a "disregard of rights of states."

Court Rules Out Segregating Any Public Transportation; Griffin Pledges Resistance

Transit Here Remaining Separated

Georgia will resist the U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation on all public buses, Gov. Griffin declared Monday.

The Atlanta Transit System will continue its policy of segregation while awaiting legal advice on the court ruling, said Robert L. Sommerville, president.

HARTSFIELD COMMENTS

Mayor Hartsfield said the decision would not immediately affect Georgia.

"The decision was made in an out of state case and won't affect Georgia until a case is filed in the state," Hartsfield said.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, attending a regional meeting of attorneys general in Virginia, said, "I will have no comment on the decision until I can study it further." Earlier, in addressing the convention, he said the Supreme Court is "recklessly exceeding its powers."

Griffin declared that the decision—"is in keeping with the court's policy heretofore announced in such cases."

USURP POWERS

He said, "It is another example of an overt usurpation of the liberties of the people.

"We shall oppose this latest decision just as we are resisting the decision in the school segregation case by all possible legal means."

Sommerville said transit officials "haven't seen the court's decision and we won't know whether it applies to all public buses until we have studied it and have gotten legal advice."

OLD POLICY

He said that, in the meantime, the transit system's policy will "remain as in the past."

"We have notices in all the vehicles which state that white passengers will seat from the front and colored passengers will seat from the rear," Sommerville said.

R. F. Robinson, regional manager of Southeastern Greyhound, told a reporter he did not know how the court's decision would affect the company's policy.

"You tell me, since we've got a state law requiring segregation on buses," he said.

He said that Greyhound buses traveling in Georgia on interstate routes have complied with the Supreme Court ruling of 10 years ago that struck down segregation on interstate bus travel.

Cook told the legal officers the Supreme Court "undoubtedly considers itself striking a blow for individual liberty."

"But the theory upon which our government was based in the beginning, and which is responsible in large part for its success, is that individual liberty will be best preserved in the long run by preserving the sovereign status of the states as a buffer for all individuals against encroachment upon their liberties by omnipotent federal government," he said.

Attorneys in the State Law Department said the ruling would not apply in this state because Georgia was not a party to the South Carolina case.

A state law gives conductors "police power" to separate the races "as much as practicable." It also empowers conductors or other employes of railroads, streetcars or buses to assign passengers to seats. The law follows:

"All conductors or other employes in charge of passenger cars shall assign all passengers to their respective cars or compartments . . . and all conductors of streetcars and buses shall assign all passengers to seats on the cars under their charge, so as to separate the white and colored passengers as much as practicable; and all conductors and other employes of railroads and all conductors of streetcars and buses shall have and are hereby invested with police powers to carry out said provisions."

Cook Foresees Bus Boycotts In Race Ruling

Sun. 12-2-56

Georgia Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook Saturday said any attempt to invoke the U.S. Supreme Court's bus integration ruling in Georgia probably would result in "sweeping white boycotts" of buses in the state.

He made the comment in a new statement on U.S. Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell's scheduled meeting with federal district attorneys from segregated states. Mr. Brownell says he wants to talk about means of enforcing the Supreme Court's ruling that city buses in Montgomery, Ala., should be integrated.

"Perhaps Mr. Brownell has overlooked the fact that cities which have granted franchises to municipal transit companies may, if they desire, refuse to renew the franchise of any company which complies with the decision," said Mr. Cook.

"AND, TOO," he went on, "it is possible that this action will provoke a boycott on the part of a great majority of white people using buses in this state, if drastic action is taken."

He called Mr. Brownell's action an "outrage" and one which "may well invite serious trouble if he has in mind plans to prosecute corporations and public officials on the slightest provocation."

Our Parks And Our Children

Daily Herald
Atlanta, Ga.
Wed. 6-13-56

Among the pleasures that come with summer are those made possible through the city's parks and recreational facilities. It is a delight to escape the heat and glare of the pavements and the inevitable confinement of urban living by a visit to a park or pool. The grass is green. The scenery is restful and relaxing. Amid the cares and the responsibilities incident to the all-engrossing matter of living, there is a unique and distinctive quality of refreshing reassurance that pervades the out-of-doors, away from the sound and the fury.

It is reassuring too, to all of us who are parents to know that the closing of school does not mean that our children, when away from home, are simply "on their own." The youngsters need a safe place to play and develop twelve months a year. The kind of citizens they will be tomorrow is very largely determined by how their leisure time is spent today. They need supervision and guidance, too. Organized and directed recreation is the only adequate means for wholesome development. When large numbers come together in the absence of adult supervision, trouble and chaos are bound to come. Self discipline, patience, and the respect for the rights and needs of others are qualified which are not always present in the thinking of people who are supposedly mature. It is hardly reasonable to expect more of our juveniles.

Again we stress the point, that it is reassuring to know that our kids have professional supervision and direction when they congregate in large numbers for the purpose of recreation. At Mozley Park, as at the community centers at Pittman and Anderson Parks, and at Central Methodist Church, the Recreation Division of the Atlanta Parks Department carries on a planned and well supervised recreational program for children of all ages and for adults as well. The youngsters who come here for recreation during the scheduled program hours are in the hands of trained personnel — employed by the city of Atlanta for the express purpose of helping our children to play together, or to develop their interests in crafts or other hobby activities. Playgrounds open at eleven-thirty in the morning and close at six. Supervised hobby or craft activities may continue until ten on some nights. At least once each week, there is a planned and supervised "teen canteen" for dancing at each of the centers except Central. Hence, under professional supervision and guidance, boys and girls in every age group may participate in whatever form of recreation fancy may dictate — from softball to ceramics, from model planes to supervised dancing.

We think this matter of professional supervision and planned activities to be of particular importance in the well-being of our children. Teen-aged dancing at the private concessions is not under the control or supervision of the Recreation Department, even though these concessions are located in the park areas. At Mozley Park, there is dancing in the pavilion every night until 10:30 — without benefit of professional supervision. Large numbers of juveniles from nine or ten upwards, from all parts of the city, and from nearby towns congregate here night after night to dance and to wander in the unlighted areas of the park. Even after the pavilion closes, they linger on, or they create traffic hazards in trying to catch rides up Mozley Drive and Hunter Road. Girls and boys alike, flag down any motorist who will stop for them. There is a potential danger in this situation not at all related to the danger of being struck by a passing automobile as they stand in the street trying to thumb a ride.

We are not against dancing. It is a wholesome and harmless form of recreation when under proper control and supervision. We do believe, however, that unsupervised public dancing in the parks at night is not in the public interest, and is particularly detrimental and deteriorative of the real interests of our youth. When the supervised activities of the day are ended, let the boys and girls go home to their parents. They will have a better chance of avoiding danger. The unsupervised public dancing in the pavilion not only lends the park and the community an atmosphere of bawdiness. It is the potential root and a strong casual factor of many fringe-problems which are already developing. We can prevent some of these problems from maturing. Let the customers have the music, if they like, but let's restrict the dancing to the Teen Canteens which are supervised by the Recreation Department of the Atlanta Park System. Let's stop it now, BEFORE the tragedy.

'Matter of principle'

FORT BENNING, Ga.—"Well, it was like this . . . For once I thought I'd stand up for principle, or sit down for it. And when it came to a showdown, I just couldn't move. I still had to face myself in the morning."

8-18-56

This was the attitude Pvt. Tilton Brinkley Jr., 23, described as he was discussing his arrest, jailing and $25 fine for refusing to move to a rear seat in a Columbus, Ga., bus on July 24.

The soft-voiced soldier, first person of his race to study at the University of Virginia Law School, being interviewed Saturday, continued:

"I WAS coming back to the post from town and I sat about three seats back from the front as I've done a dozen times before. So I was a little surprised when the driver said:

"'Hey, you, You've got to move to the back.'

"I said: 'I'm quite comfortable where I am.' And he said: 'What race are you?' And I answered: 'Isn't it obvious?' for I am very definitely colored.

"So he got off the bus and made a telephone call. We were still in the city limits. And pretty soon the cops came driving up."

Brinkley, who was born in Hobson, Va., and whose family still lives in Portsmouth, Va., although he spent several years in Harlem while finishing his pre-law course at Lincoln University, in 1952, paused for a moment and then admitted:

"FRANKLY, I thought the driver was bluffing. He wasn't, so, then I knew I wasn't going to move to the back even if it meant my life. I knew that for once I was going to stand up for principle by sitting down.

"So they dragged me off the bus and took me to jail. They kept me there for three hours and wouldn't let me call a lawyer I knew or nobody else.

"But finally they brought a bondsman around and said I could get out on $100 bond if I paid the $10 bond fee. So I did."

He paused again:

"I was due in court last Thursday, so I had to figure out what I should do. Nobody in the Army said anything to me about it. But I finally made up my mind what I'd do.

"WHEN I came up before the judge (in Columbus Municipal Court), he said that, although I had lived in New York, I had been born in Virginia, and I knew what the laws were.

He said: " 'We've had a law on segregation on transportation here since 1890 and we passed a new one last April.' He said: 'These laws are no reflection on the colored people; they were just passed to keep down trouble between the races.'

"And when I said nothing, he said: 'I'm going to sentence you to 30 days in jail, but I'm going to suspend the sentence. And I'm also going to fine you $25 for breaking the law.'

"SO I reached into my pocket and paid the $25 fine and walked out.

"For, do you know what I had decided while waiting for the trial?

"I had decided that as a private in the U.S. Army, I couldn't do anything basic about the problem. But as a lawyer, I might be able to do more than just stand up or sit down for a principle.

"So I decided I'd just go on and finish my hitch in the Army and then hasten on back to the University of Virginia to finish my last two years in law there.

"This whole thing is bigger than one private and one Columbus, Ga., bus."

State Bus Segregation Laws Not 'Dead Letters,' Cook Says

Cook Sees State Helpless In Bus Bias Injunctions

Daily World
Thurs. 11-29-56
Atlanta, Ga.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook admitted yesterday that bus segregation may be just about at the end of the road, but advocated boycotts by white people as a last ditch means of preserving the old system.

When asked if Georgia had any plans for saving bus segregation short of abolishing transportation systems, the Atty. Gen. said that a negative answer would "give us away," and if the state did have a plan, it would not be wise to let opponents know about it.

When the Supreme Court anti-segregation bus decision becomes official on Dec. 17, Cook said Negroes in a number of Georgia cities are then expected to attempt integration. If, in these test cases, they are made to sit in the rear of the bus, or are put off the vehicle, Cook said they can go straight to Federal District Court and ask for an injunction against the further segregation on the buses.

If the injunction was granted, Cook added, the state could do little or nothing.

He pointed out that bus franchises are between company and the various municipalities, and do not directly involve the state.

However he added:

"I would, if invited, enter the case as a friend of the court."

Cook threw his support behind suggestions that southern officials meet in an attempt to map ways of meeting the threat of forced integration in southern states, he said:

"I'd be highly in favor of such a meeting, but I'd rather we waited until after Atty. Gen (Herbert) Brownell holds his little meeting. He's one of my chief targets and I want him to keep talking."

Cook was referring to Brownell's call of a U. S. Attorneys meeting from 14 southern states for a meeting in December in Washington, D. C. to develop the program for enforcing the Supreme Court bus decision.

Cook said that a boycott by white people was the best means of staving off bus integration in Georgia and he flatly predicted that this would happen in every municipality in the state if Federal courts order an end to segregated seating.

"I personally would (not ride the buses) because of the principal involved, not because I do not like Negroes."

Cook further stated that he believed all Georgia cities would decline to renew bus franchises with companies that are forced to integrate.

Greyhound denies defiance of ICC

NEW YORK — "If Greyhound buses are stopping at bus stations in the South which still display 'white' and 'colored' signs, the Greyhound Company and they are stations not owned by over which the Greyhound has no control."

This was the comment of the traffic control manager of the Greyhound Bus Co. here Friday when an AFRO reporter called his attention to the fact that some bus stations in the South displaying the Greyhound sign have not taken down their "white" and "colored" signs.

THE INTERSTATE Commerce Commission ordered that all such signs be taken down for interstate passengers by Jan. 10.

"We have never gone along with segregating passengers on the Greyhound lines," the bus line spokesman said, "as a matter of fact, we were among the first to try to give this new policy a push.

"All the signs are down in stations operated by Greyhound and we are glad to take them down. We do not, however, control some small stations where our buses stop and I feel that the stations you have in mind must be those."

$500,000 Asked In Bus Bias Injury

RIVERHEAD, L. I., Jan. 31 —A Negro nurse has brought a $500,000 damage suit against the Pennsylvania-Greyhound Bus Lines, charging she suffered permanent physical injuries when she was beaten by a white man after refusing to move to the rear of a bus passing through Alabama last summer, it was disclosed today.

The action was disclosed after attorneys for the bus company, in a Supreme Court hearing, asked for a clarification of the charges in papers filed by Mrs. Anne Loftis, 63, of 4 S. Emerald Lane, North Amityville, L. I.

The bus company asked Justice L. Barron Hill for a ruling whether the firm is accused of negligence, assault or both.

Sol Horenstein, attorney for Mrs. Loftis, contended the company is guilty of both as well as breach of contract since its ticket guaranteed Mrs. Loftis "a safe, comfortable trip."

Justice Hill reserved decision.

RIVERHEAD, N. Y.—(SNS)— A suit for $500,000 was entered by an aged Negro nurse against a bus company because a white passenger allegedly beat the plaintiff up last summer on a trip between Atlanta and Montgomery, Ala.

The complaint was filed for Mrs. Anne Loftis, 63 of North Amityville. She said she refused to comply with an order by the bus driver to move to a rear seat because of "a doctor's order to avoid bumps and jars."

She said a white passenger then "grabbed me by the arms. He yanked me up, banged my head against a metal bar in a seat in front of me, twisted my right arm behind my back and then threw me into a rear seat."

The suit was filed in the State Supreme Court here against the Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines. The New York Supreme Court is a trial court and not the highest court in the state.

Robert Lee, assistant manager of Southeastern Greyhound Lines in Atlanta, said the case has not been brought to his attention. He said it probably would fall under the jurisdiction of Roy F. Robinson, manager of the district where the woman was allegedly assaulted.

Illinois Central tears down racial designation signs

Afro-American Sat. 1-7-56

CHICAGO (ANP) — The Illinois Central Railroad, acting on an order from the Illinois Commerce Commission, has started putting into effect a plan to end segregation of white and non-white passengers by Jan. 10.

A spokesman for the railroad said it "is in compliance" with the state commission's ruling of last Wednesday and the Interstate Commerce Commission order of Nov. 25 directing railroad and bus companies to cease jim crow practices.

Baltimore, Md.

Illinois Central has already notified agents to integrate passengers on coach trains loaded in Chicago for points south, the spokesman said, and similar notices are being sent to agents in southern states.

* * *

SEVERAL YEARS ago formal complaint was field with the Illinois commission against segregation by Illinois Central, particularly as to its loading of passengers in Chicago.

When the Illinois commission ordered the railroad to cease its loading practices, Illinois Central appealed to the Illinois Supreme Court which held the subject matter was one for the Interstate Commerce Commission to decide.

The railroad then appealed to the United States Supreme Court which refused to review the Illinois case.

* * *

CHAIRMAN George Perrino of the Illinois commission said the integration order, effective immediately, applies to intercity buses, city buses and street cars, and airplanes as well as railroad passengers.

He said the common carriers have indicated they will not appeal either the interstate order of the Illinois order.

Last week, an Illinois Central representative in Mississippi gave notice that he will abide by the order. He ordered the "Colored" and "White" signs removed from train depots throughout the state.

But the Mississippi public service commission and Gov.-elect J. P. Coleman declared the station will not be integrated.

To keep the present segregated waiting rooms, the Mississippi commission plans to fine any public utility $50 a day for disregarding the state law which prohibits mixing of the races.

Acting in compliance with the recent directive of the U. S. Interstate Commerce Commission officials of the Illinois Central Railroad had the segregation signs removed from the depot here Monday, only to have them replaced by a new set of signs on order of the City of Jackson.

The new signs painted white, and set on waist-high pedestals designating the White and Colored waiting rooms were set on the sidewalks in front of the Colored and White waiting rooms and in the corridor of the depot. Each sign bears the inscription, "By Order of the Police."

No action was reported at the local bus terminals.

Miss.

In Washington a spokesman for the commission said he was cautiously optimistic that the carriers would comply with the order. The Commission he said had adopted a wait-and-see attitude before deciding whether to crack down on violators. Carriers who refused to comply with the order face fines up to $5000 for each offense.

It was pointed out that one of the complications of the order was that it applied only to interstate passengers. That brought on such a situation as at Charlotte, N. C., where the old signs have been replaced by new ones reading, "Colored Intrastate Waiting Room."

Station Signs Come Down

Afro-American
Baltimore Md.

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON (NNPA) "Colored and "white" signs over railroad and bus station waiting rooms and rest room facilities were being lowered through the South during the weekend.

The move is in compliance with a ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission which gave buses and railroads until Tuesday, Jan. 10 to comply.

Twelve railroads, a rail terminal company and a bus line were affected by the ICC order to cease-and-desist from maintaining and requiring the use of segregated accommodations in railway coaches, trains and station waiting rooms by colored interstate passengers.

Sat. 1-14-56

THE BALTIMORE AND OHIO, which operates in Maryland and West Virginia but was not one of the defendants in the two cases, said it had no problem because segregated facilities over its line had long been abolished.

The Chesapeake and Ohio, which operates in Kentucky and Virginia, but also was not a defendant, said it did not have much of a problem as it carries no segregated coaches.

Compliance with the order by abolishing segregated waiting rooms and complying with the state laws requiring segregation was under discussion, a spokesman said.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY, which operates between Washington and the Deep South, said signs on its waiting rooms would come down as far as interstate travelers were concerned, but segregation laws in the southern states in which it operates would have to be obeyed so far as intrastate passengers were concerned.

Obviously, this means that the Southern plans to follow a practice of nonsegregation as to waiting rooms for interstate passengers, but would still maintain rooms for passengers whose travel begins and ends within a state.

The Southern said segregation on its trains already had been effectively abolished.

W. Thomas Rice, president of the R. F. and P., said segregation signs would come down on its waiting rooms between Washington and Richmond. He said his line had no problem concerning intrastate and interstate passengers.

Afro-American

MR. RICE said, however, that his railroad could take no action with respect to space leased to the Union News Company in the Broad Street Station in Richmond.

The Union News Company operates segregated public lunch rooms in the station. The Broad Street Station is operated by the Richmond Terminal, a corporation jointly controlled by the R. F. and P. and the Atlantic Coast Line.

The ICC dismissed the complaint against the Union News Company on the ground that it had no authority over the lunch room.

IT COULD not be ascertained here Friday what the Texas and Pacific railroad intends to do. The complaint against it also was dismissed because the record contained no evidence relating to its practices with respect to interstate passengers.

The other railroads affected by the order, whose intentions also are unknown, are: The St. Louis - San Francisco Railway Co., the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Co., the Atlantic Coast Line, Seaboard Air Line, Missouri Pacific Railroad Co., Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe, and the Panhandle and Santa Fe.

Also under orders to cease segregation on its buses is the Carolina Coach Company.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES—Workmen are shown removing jim crow signs from Richmond's Broad Street station, in compliance with the Interstate Commerce Commission's ruling. Such signs were also coming down in bus and railroad terminals throughout the South to meet the Jan. 10 deadline fixed by the ICC.—(Henderson photo.)

RRs, Bus Terminals May Face Action

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA) — Action will have to be brought against railroads, bus lines and terminal companies which were not covered by the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission to cease and desist from practicing racial segregation of interstate passengers, if they are not voluntarily complying with the order.

This was the opinion of informed sources who were asked Saturday about steps which would have to be taken to compel all railroads, bus lines and terminal companies to comply with the order.

HOUSTON — In Houston the situation was about the same when a check was made Monday. Three passenger terminals were still maintaining their separate waiting rooms and cafes. No signs had been moved at the MK&T (Katy) railroad station, and the Greyhound and the Continental bus stations.

The ICC has original jurisdiction to determine whether a common carrier, engaged in interstate commerce, is violating the Interstate Commerce Act by subjecting any particular person to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever, and complaints of such discrimination should be filed with it.

Belford V. Lawson, Jr, an attorney, said he thought contempt proceedings could be brought in Federal district courts against any of the twelve railroads, the rail terminal company and the bus line, to which the ICC issued its order, if they fail or refuse to comply with it.

ICC Decree Defied In La. And In Mississippi

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 1-19-56

WASHINGTON —(ANP)— Traditional separation of Negro and white inter-state passengers in the South, made legal 123 years ago by a Supreme Court opinion, faded away Tuesday in scores of southern cities as railway, bus and airline officials quietly complied with the Interstate Commerce Commission's directive to tear down the "White" and "Colored" designations of waiting rooms.

Signs dividing the races were removed in such strong segregation centers of the south as Birmingham, Ala., Atlanta, Ga., Tallahassee, Fla., Columbia, S. C. and Richmond, Va.

But officials in Mississippi and Louisiana defied the federal order and ordered continued rigid enforcement of state laws requiring separate facilities for whites and Negroes on public travel conveyances within state borders.

Gov. Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana, describing the ICC ruling as illegal, told all state, parish and municipal officials in his state to disregard the integration order.

He said the ICC order directly violated the Supreme Court opinion in an 1883 civil rights case to the effect that the regulation of accomodations and facilities for public conveyanes was reserved to the states under the 10th Amendment. Kennon said that policy had never been amended.

Mississippi also resisted the order, but less dramatically.

In Jackson, Gulfport and Green wood, Miss., railroad and bus officials had taken down the white and colored signs on waiting rooms but city officials replaced them with their own under local segregation laws.

Chief W. D. Rayfield of the Jackson city police said his men will be stationed at the Illinois Central Railroad depot to enforce the city's stand if necessary.

Mayor A. S. Scott of Laurel said train and bus stations will remain segregated. And at Hattiesburg, the Southern Railway put a sign reading: "Colored Waiting Room for Interstate Passengers" over the old colored waiting room.

The ICC had not attempted to regulate segregation of passengers in travel within a state, but the interstate order presented a ticklish problem of separating local from "through" passengers.

Meanwhile, in Washington, the ICC adopted a wait-and-see attitude on the matter of enforcement.

An ICC spokesman said he was cautiously optimistic that the carriers would comply with the anti-segregation order.

Here, state by state, is how the ICC order was met:

ALABAMA—In Birmingham, the Louisville and Nashville Railroad discarded segregation rules at its station without incident. The waiting room for Negroes at the terminal station was marked "Colored Intrastate Passenger Waiting Room" The room reserved for white passengers before the ICC order now is marked by a sign reading simply: "Waiting Room."

Drivers for the Southeastern Greyhound Bus Line were told by company officials that "intrastate passengers may be courteously requested to comply with the law" but that nothing further be done if a passenger declines to do so."

ARKANSAS—An official for the Frisco Railroad said at Little Rock, Ark., that the line was removing "white" signs in rooms formerly reserved only for white passengers.

GEORGIA—H. A. Debutte, president of the Southern Railway System, biggest user of the Atlanta terminal station, said the system is complying with the ICC ruling. A Negro sailor took a seat in the white waiting room and stayed there a long time. A number of other Negroes passed through the white waiting room instead of using their usual entrance.

Atlanta airports and bus terminal spokesmen said segregation always had been "informal" at those places and was continuing on that basis

FLORIDA — The ICC ruling brought little change in Florida's capital city of Tallahassee. The Seabord Airline Railroad took down the white sign over the door of its main waiting room and changed the sign over the former Negro waiting room to read: "Colored Intra-state."

Daily World

A depot official explained if a Negro wanted to buy a ticket across the state line he can come in the old waiting room, buy his ticket and wait for his train. If he wants to purchase a ticket to a point inside Florida, he will be directed to the "Colored Intra-State" waiting room.

There was no change of "white" and "colored" signs at the airport or at either of the city's two bus stations.

LOUISIANA—Gov. Kennon ordered all officials to continue rigid enforcement of state laws requiring separation of the races on public travel conveyances within state borders. He said the ICC order violated an 1833 Supreme Court decision.

MISSISSIPPI—Asst. Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson said it is a misdemeanor to violate the state's segregation laws, punishable by fines of $100 to $1,000. Several Mississippi legislators indicate a bill will be introduced this week to define state authority over waiting rooms and penalties for violation.

Signs dividing the races remained up in rail and bus stations in Jackson, Gulfport and Greenwood, Miss. Police will be used to enforce the city's stand in Jackson, if necessary, officials said.

NORTH CAROLINA— At Asheville, the Southern Railway has removed "Colored Waiting Room" signs and replaced them with "Waiting Room" signs at its passenger terminal. Conductors have been verbally instructed to make no segregation designations on trains carrying interstate passengers.

Separate waiting rooms, rest rooms and eating facilities at Union Bus Station remained although the bus lines have complied with the ICC order.

Rail Segregation Ending For 2; Has Effect Here

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4—At least two railroads operating in the South intend to comply with an Interstate Commerce Commission order to end segregation on trains, buses, and waiting rooms. The order applies to interstate travel.

Times 1-5-56

Southern Railway and the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad said they would comply by Jan. 10, the ICC deadline.

Southern Railway, which operates between Washington and the deep South, said the segregation signs on its waiting rooms would come down as far as interstate travelers were concerned. However, the Southern operates in many states with segregation laws and these would have to be observed with respect to intrastate travel.

In principle this would mean separate waiting and rest room facilities for Negro and white passengers who start and end their trip within one state. But distinguishing between an interstate traveler and an intrastate traveler at any given station seemed to make the segregation impractical.

Southern said segregation on the trains already had been effectively abolished.

(Southern Railway is a major stockholder in Atlanta Terminal Co., operator of Terminal Station in Atlanta. Other railways which use and jointly own the terminal are Central of Georgia, Seaboard Air Line and Atlanta and West Point companies.

(S. R. Young, president of A&WP, said, "It is safe to say that Southern's policy will probably be Atlanta Terminal's policy."

(The station's expenses are paid by the railroads according to how much they use Terminal facilities. Southern uses the facilities more than any of the other companies.

("Whatever Southern decides to do, A&WP will have no objection," Young said. W. E. Dillard of Savannah, president of Central of Georgia, said. "We will comply with the law just as we always have.")

Checkerboard Pattern Seen In ICC Ruling

The outlook today was for a checkerboard pattern of compliance and defiance when conflicting federal and state regulations governing racial relations bump heads again in the south next week. This time it will be in the fiel dof transportation.

On Tuesday, an Interstate Commerce Commission order barring segregation will go into effect.

Officials of some deep south states however, maintained that state laws requiring that very segregation remain in effect and will be enforced.

Left in the middle are the railroads and bus lines to whom the ICC order was directed.

The order bars racial discrimination among interstate passengers on trains and buses and at the train and bus terminals.

The order does not bar discrimination among travelers within the borders of a single state.

Some railroad terminal officials thought they would try to maintain the customary "white" and "colored" waiting rooms for passengers in intrastate travel, while discarding such designations for those traveling interstate. A poll failed to uncover any who had a specific plan for accomplishing that.

The Southern railway announced it would comply with the ICC order concerning interstate passengers and with state laws as far as intrastate passengers go.

The Louisville and Nashville Railroad announced racial segregation will end for all interstate passengers over its 4,700-mile system next Tuesday. Separate coaches, however, will be providd for Negroes in intrastate travel.

Waiting Room Signs Removed At Atlanta Terminal

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—(AP)—Segregated waiting rooms for interstate rail passengers at the Atlanta, Ga., terminal station have been abolished in compliance with an Interstate Commerce Commission order, a spokesman for the Southern Railway System said Thursday.

Fri. 1-6-56

Signs designating white and Negro waiting rooms for interstate passengers have been removed, the spokesman said.

He told a reporter, however, that a sign designating a separate room for Negro intrastate passengers will be erected shortly to comply with Georgia laws.

The official admitted that distinguishing between intrastate and interstate passengers would be a problem. Specific details on operation of the new waiting room setup apparently remained to be worked out.

Some Southern officials began at once to comply with the order. Others voiced strong opposition.

ICC Race Order Defied in South

Post and Times Herald p. 11
Washington, D. C.

ATLANTA, Jan. 10 (UP)—The Governor of Louisiana today branded as illegal a Federal order to integrate public waiting rooms, but many Southern cities quietly complied with it.

Today was the deadline for carrying out the Interstate Commerce Commission's directive to tear down the "White" and "Colored" designations of waiting rooms at railway and bus stations and airports.

But Gov. Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana ordered all officials in his state to continue rigid enforcement of state laws requiring separate facilities.

He said the ICC order directly violated a Supreme Court opinion in an 1833 civil rights case to the effect that the regulation of accommodations and facilities for public conveyances was reserved to the states under the 10th Amendment.

Neighboring Mississippi also resisted the order. In Jackson, the capital, railroad and bus officials had taken down the white and colored waiting room designations but city officials replaced them with their own under local segregation laws. Similar action was taken in other Mississippi cities.

At Hattiesburg, Miss., the Southern Railway put up a sign reading: "Colored Waiting Room for Intrastate Passengers' at the old "Jim Crow" waiting room. The ICC had not attempted to regulate segregation of passengers in travel within a state, but the intrastate order presented a ticklish task of separating local from "through" passengers.

There was no report, however of any Negroes using the former all-white waiting room at Hattisburg.

In Birmingham, Ala., the Louisville & Nashville Railroad discarded segergation rules without incident.

A "intrastate" waiting room for Negroes was designated at the terminal station in Birmingham as in Hattiesburg. The same action was taken at Charlottle, N. C., and Greenville, S. C., also points in the Southern Railway system.

At Atlanta, one Negro woman, who identified herself as Lurlene Barber of West Point, Ga., sat today in the former all-white waiting room at the big terminal railroad station. She said she missed her train and would wait until 9 p. m. for another. Her presence caused no excitement.

At the Atlanta Union Station signs were taken down, but an attendant said several Negro travelers inquired which was the "colered" waiting room and took seats in the old segregated area.

(In Washington, the ICC said it had received no complaints yet on possible violations of its order. A spokesman said the Commission plans no action on possible violations until reports are received from field employes.)

Official Mum On Dropping Of Jim Crow Car

Houston, Tex.

HOUSTON — An official of the Southern Pacific Railroad's Houston office neither confirms nor denies a report published in a Los Angeles newspaper that the SP's "Car No. 20," the Jim Crow car attached to the Sunset Limited, had been dropped in compliance with the Interstate Commerce Commission. The crack Sunset leaves Los Angeles daily for Houston and New Orleans.

H G Carter, public relations officer with the Houston SP office, when asked to confirm the report, said another SP official, a Mr Gray, would call The Informer and make a statement. That was Monday afternoon. At presstime today, no one from the SP office had called.

The California Eagle, a Los Angeles newspaper, stated in its January 5, edition, the paper had learned that SP officials had ordered the all Negro car (which usually accommodates Negroes traveling from California to Texas and Louisiana) be dropped as of Sunday, January 8.

The Eagle said it learned that henceforth all passengers loading in Los Angeles will be seated on a first come, first-serve basis, regardless of the traveler's destination or racial identity.

This action, if valid, is in harmony with the Interstate Commerce Commission's ruling last November 25, which directed that a person traveling inter-state on trains and busses could not be segregated because of his color. The ICC also directed that Southern train depots and bus stations remove all "Colored" and "White" signs from waiting rooms, cafes, and wash rooms.

South Shows Varied Reactions To Transit, Other Bias Issues

Two Southern states resorted to police powers Tuesday to enforce racial segregation at Terminals serving interstate travellers, while other states generally ignored the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The ICC order to end seperaae facilities in airline, railroad and Bus terminals went into effect at midnight Monday. But there was no

Meanwhile, there were other developments in the South touching upon segregation in the schools and public recreational facilities.

Gov. Thomas B. Stanley and Virginia pro-segregation leaders moved ahead with plans for a constitutional convention to authorize a "private" school system supported by tax money. Virginians approved the plan by a 2 to 1 majority in a statewide referendum, in a rejection of the Supreme Court's school segrega- general effort in the South to comply.

COLUMBUS GOLF CASE

In Columbus, Ga. Negro citizens formally asked the city commission for authority to use the municipal golf course, which is operated under lease by the Lions Club. Negroes had been turned down in an effort to play on the course earlier.

This Commission accepted the petition and advised a 20 man degelation: "You will hear from us in due time."

A. L. Haden, Jr., Director of the county States Rights Council of Georgia told the Commission it should not consider itself bound by the recent Federal decision which opened Atlanta Municipal Golf Courses.

Louisiana and Mississippi resorted to police powers to preserve segregation in disregard of the Interstate Commerce Commission order

In Jackson, Miss., where railroad and Bus lines removed "for Colored Only" signs in waiting rooms, city police put up new ones, and extra uniformed police were on duty at terminals to "preserve order." Similar action was planned in Laurel, Gulfport and Greenwood.

LOUISIANA ACTION

In Baton Rouge, La. Governor Robert Kennon termed the ICC order "unconstitutional" and ordered police of all levels to enforce the State's segregation laws.

There were no reports of attempts by patrons to cross the segregation lines.

Elsewhere in the South, the picture was one of transportation companies trying to observe conflicting Federal and State directives.

Bus terminals said they would not enforce segregation in Nashville, but the traditional "white" and

Southern R Rs Make Move To End Bias

WASHINGTON — Indications here are that the Southern railroads are moving toward the end of racial bias on interstate trains. Among those heard from prior to January 10 were the Southern Pacific, the Baltimore and Ohio, the Maryland and West Virginia, the Chesapeake and Ohio, and the Fredericksburg and Potomac. All expressed the intention to comply with the Interstate Commerce Commission's ruling, ending bias in interstate travel on January 10.

Some roads, such as the Baltimore and Ohio, the Maryland and West Virginia, and the Chesapeake and Ohio, operating on the Eastern seaboard, indicated that they would have very little trouble. Some had already ended segregation on the trains and only had the question of the waiting rooms.

Some few were trying to comply with the ICC ruling and also with the local state laws. In such cases the roads were taking down the signs "For Colored" generally, and putting up signs saying, "For Colored Intrastate Passengers" over the original room that was for colored altogether.

It is believed generally that this will not have very much effect because of the difficulty of telling who are intrastate and who are interstate passengers. It is more or less a gesture toward the state laws against the mixing of races, and will permit the respective roads to prove that they are complying with state law by putting a sign up.

However, since the segregation laws are generally enforced by the roads themselves, rather than the local police force, it is believed that the roads will ignore where Negro passengers sit and not inquire too closely as to whether they are interstate or intrastate.

Some of the roads are taking the attitude that they will do nothing about lunch counters, because they are leased. It is anticipated that this will settle itself in some instances by the lessees permitting the Negroes to eat, and in other cases by lawsuits.

In the case of the Missouri Pacific at Houston, they have one large section, or alcove sort of room for Negroes. It is believed that this road will solve the problem by removing the "For Colored" sign up over the alcove section.

In the case of the S. P. station at Houston, there is less trouble. The S. P. has colored and white waiting rooms, but they have moved the ticket window over to the white side exclusively, and Negroes have already been sitting over there.

For many it has been surprising that there has been such little hubbub or protest made over this ruling of the ICC on the part of the Citizens Committees. If this lack of noise continues, the problem will settle itself by the roads refusing to take any official notice of where people sit.

The S. P. gave notice last week in California that they were pulling off the special car that they had run on their crack train, called Car No 20, in which they had been putting Negroes.

ICC Order Not Enforced In Atlanta Yet

Officials of local common carriers will await direct orders from the Interstate Commerce Commission before abolishing racial segregation in railroad and bus stations catering to interstate travelers. The deadline was placed at January 10.

Meanwhile a Southern Railway spokesman said in Washington Thursday that segregated waiting rooms for interstate railway passengers is forbidden at Atlanta's Terminal station. The order has not been officially received here, local officials claimed.

A local railroad spokesman indicated that something "would probably be done" after he was informed that a Washington official heralded the end of segregation in stations in compliance with an order by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

A local spokesman for the Greyhound Bus Company revealed that he would not make a move to desegregate until official word is received from ICC. However, he would abide by the decision would not be his, he indicated.

The vice-president of the Southern Railway Co. and president of Atlanta Terminal Co., H. W. Bondurant, was away on business and could not be reached for comment. Bondurant's subordinate, however, said he doubted if anyone here could comment until the order is received from Southern headquarters. He theorized that the spokesman in Washington represented Southern headquarters.

The Washington spokes told reporters that signs designating separate waiting rooms for white and Negro interstate passengers have been removed from Terminal Station, but that signs to segregate Negro intrastate passengers would be erected in order to comply with Georgia's conflicting segregation law.

Most Waiting-Room Bias Ends

Louisiana, Defying I. C. C., Cites 1833 Court Decision

By The United Press

ATLANTA, Jan. 10. — Gov. Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana today branded as illegal a Federal order to integrate public waiting rooms, but many Southern cities quietly complied with it.

Today was the deadline for carrying out the Interstate Commerce Commission's directive to tear down the "white" and "colored" designations of waiting rooms at railway and bus stations and airports.

But Gov. Kennon ordered all state, parish and municipal officials in his state to continue rigid enforcement of state laws requiring separate facilities for the races at such stations.

There was no report, however, of any Negroes using the former all-white waiting room at Hattiesburg.

In Birmingham, Ala., traditionally one of the strongest pro-segregation centers of the South, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad discarded segregation rules at its station without incident.

An "intrastate" waiting room for Negroes was designated at the terminal station in Birmingham as in Hattiesburg. The same action was taken at Charlotte, N. C., and Greenville, S. C., also points in the Southern Railway system.

In Atlanta, one Negro woman, who identified herself as Lurlene Barber, of West Point, Ga., sat today in the former all-white waiting room at the big Terminal Railroad Station. She said she missed her train and would wait until 9 p. m. for another. Her presence caused no excitement.

At the Atlanta Union Station signs were taken down, but an attendant said several Negro travelers inquired which was the "colored" waiting room and took seats in the old segregated area. One Negro man, however, sat for an hour and a half in the former white waiting room. Atlanta airport and bus terminal spokesmen said segregation had always been "informal" at those places and was continuing on that basis.

No Complaints to I. C. C.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10 (UP.)—The I. C. C. said today it has received no complaints yet on possible violations of its order to end racial segregation in trains, buses and waiting rooms.

Probe of N. A. A. C. Asked

ATLANTA, Jan. 10 (UP.)—Georgia officials asked the state Legislature today to scrutinize the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for possible subversive influences.

State Attorney Gen. Eugene Cook sent 350 pages of photostatic reports to leaders of the state General Assembly and in a letter to each member accused the N. A. A. C. P. of "fomenting strife and discord." Mr. Cook, unable legally to propose legislation, said he was submitting results of Georgia's months-long official investigation for "appropriate action."

Gov. Marvin Griffin in his message to the legislature on the State of Georgia's affairs formally asked for adoption of a long-proposed "private-school" plan to combat the United States Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation.

"The hour for action is here," Gov. Griffin said. "Unless we act, and act decisively, we will see, one by one, the reserved powers of the sovereign states trampled under foot."

Dispute in Virginia

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 10 (UP.)—A spokesman for the N. A. A. C. P. said today that legal recourse will be taken if necessary to block any Virginia maneuver that would keep segregation in the schools.

Virginians voted two-to-one yesterday in favor of a program designed to sidestep the Supreme Court's order to integrate the races in public schools.

With 1,762 of the state's 1,861 precincts reporting, unofficial tabulations showed 300,172 votes for the program and 143,106 against.

Oliver W. Hill, N. A. A. C. P. attorney, said that if Virginia does not show good faith toward the Supreme Court's order, legal steps will be taken. N. A. A. C. P. officials did not say what those steps would be, however, and indicated they would await further developments before deciding.

Segregation Must Remain, APSC Orders

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 13 (U.P.)—The Alabama Public Service Commission ordered segregation to remain in interstate transportation facilities today, a direct countermand to an earlier ruling by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

PSC President C. C. (Jack) Owen reported his office is sending out letters to all interstate carriers in Alabama, directing them to maintain segregation in all vehicles and waiting rooms. He said similar letters will be distributed to all city law enforcement agencies over the state.

The PSC's order was in direct opposition to the earlier ICC ruling ordering an end to segregation in interstate carriers.

It was the second Alabama rebuff to the ICC order in as many days. A Barbour County grand jury yesterday reported it would continue to recognize Alabama segregation laws and blamed a breakdown in race relations on court actions that have ordered integration.

Owens said, "We are directing all public carriers to keep segregation signs in their stations in compliance with Alabama law. It is the law of the state and we intend to uphold it to the best of our abilities as long as it is on the books."

Owens said the letters were being directed to all "the presidents of all bus and train companies operating in Alabama."

Patterson said he moved enough wreckage to get into the room to help firemen get her through the window covered with burglar bars, which had to be pried apart.

He said the two dead men, plus Jimmie Jenkins and Foreman W. M. Taylor, had gone to work on the boiler because they did not have enough steam to operate the plant.

He said Taylor had stepped back into another department just before the blast occurred.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Survey On ICC Ruling Shows Lagging Response

Defender Sat. 1-21-56 p.1

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (NNPA) — An on-the-scene survey shows spotty compliance here with the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission for abolition of racial segregation of interstate passengers in railroad coaches, buses, and waiting rooms.

The survey, made by the Birmingham World, reveals that:

At the Terminal Station all racial signs have been removed except one. There are signs over one waiting room reading "Colored Intrastate Passenger Waiting Room."

SIGNS DOWN

All racial signs are down at the Louisville and Nashville shed except one indicating "Colored Lunch Room."

One racial sign was on display at Trailways Bus depot saying "Colored" with an arrow pointing to the colored waiting room.

GREYHOUND OBSTINATE WORLD OVER

No racial signs have been removed at the Greyhound bus terminal, with seven in open display saying "Colored Waiting Room," two saying Colored Baggage Room," and four with one word "Colored" on the four doors of the two entrances to the colored waiting room.

There is no waiting room at the Terminal Station designated for white intrastate passengers.

The deadline for compliance with the order was Jan 10.

The Louisville and Nashville Railroad, one of twelve railroads which were defendants along with a rail terminal company and a bus line in proceedings brought before the ICC by the NAACP, discarded segregation rules at its station without incident.

COMPLAINT DISMISSED

The Commission dismissed the complaint involving separate lunchroom facilities for white and colored persons in the Broad Street station at Richmond, Va., and, therefore, no cease-and-desist order was issued against the operation of segregated lunchrooms.

The Louisville and Nashville had announced earlier that it was ending racial segregation of interstate passengers on its lines and waiting rooms, except at Memphis where the Union Station is operated by two Tennessee corporations.

R. C. Parsons, vice president of the L. and N., announced in Nashville that racial segregation of interstate passengers throughout the L. and N. system was ended as of Jan. 10.

He said separate coaches would still be provided for colored passengers in intrastate travel.

He pointed out that separate waiting rooms will stil be maintained and, theoretically, colored and white intrastate passengers will use different waiting rooms, but he did not know how they would be separated.

SEE HOW IT WORKS

"You can't ask every individual there whether he's traveling inside the state or across state lines," he said. "We'll just have to live with it a while and see how it works out."

In other developments on the deadline for carrying out the ICC order, Governor Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana ordered all state, parish (county) and municipal officials in his state to continue rigid enforcement of state laws requiring separate facilities at railway and bus stations.

"OLD MISS"

Mississippi also resisted the order. In Jackson, the capital, railroad and bus officials had taken down the white and colored waiting room signs. But city officials replaced them with their own under local segregation laws. Similar action was taken in other Mississippi cities.

At Hattiesburg, Miss., the Southern Railways put up a sign reading: "Colored Waiting Room for Intrastate Passengers" at the old waiting room formerly used by all colored passengers.

The sign at the colored waiting room at the Broad Street Station in Richmond, which formerly read "Colored," was changed Tuesday to read "Colored Intrastate Passengers."

A survey by the Wilmington Journal of steps taken here to comply with orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission that racial segregation be ended of interstate passengers in railroad coaches, buses and waiting rooms showed:

The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad took down racial signs in waiting rooms. The Seaboard Air Line has one waiting room designated "Colored Intrastate," and a second waiting room has no sign over it.

The Union Bus Terminal has made no changes in its racial signs.

South Obeys, Balks Travel Bias Ban

Defender p.1 Sat. 1-21-56 Chicago, Ill.

Conflicting federal and state regulations governing segregation bumped heads this week in the deep South.

An Interstate Commerce Commission order barring segregation went into effect Jan. 10 but officials in some southern states maintained that state statutes requiring segregation still stand.

The railroads and bus lines affected by the ICC order were left in the middle, so to speak.

The ICC order bans discrimination among interstate passengers on trains and buses and at railroad and bus terminals. It does not bar, however, separation among travelers within the borders of a single state.

Before the order became effective, some railroad terminal officials expressed belief they would attempt to maintain the customary "white" and "colored" waiting rooms for passengers in intrastate travel while abandoning such designations for those traveling interstate.

A survey this week showed no incidents. Its results follow:

ATLANTA — Signs designating separate facilities removed in the railroad terminals. Some Negro travellers use formerly white waiting room without incident but most Negro travellers continued to use former faciilities.

BIRMINGHAM— Separate designations abandoned. No outward signs of discrimination now but no general acceptance immediately by Negro travellers to freely use former white facilities. No disturbances.

COLUMBIA, S. C. — State Commerce Commission reaffirms will continue to enforce state law requiring segregation. Signs removed in railroad terminals.

MEMPHIS — Situation remains the same as before ICC ruling. Segregation still in effect at railroad and bus terminals. Airport never segregated. City fathers apparently will ignore ICC ruling and let things stand as they are, observers say.

p. 2

OKLAHOMA CITY — Jimmie Stewart, local president of the N. A. A. C. P., terms compliance with the ICC order fair. Says few isolated instances where "integration being discouraged." But he believes, he adds, that full compliance can be worked out without need for any court action. C. C. Dillars, station master at Union Railroad Station, reports, "No sign of any kind" restricing colored travellers to certain waiting rooms or rest rooms. Signs taken down Monday but had not been enforced for several years.

HOUSTON — Segregation signs still stand in bus and railroad terminals so far. Transportation company representatives as the local level apparently awaiting instructions from higher eschelon. But apparent little attention is being made by travellers to the ICC ruling.

ARKANSAS — An official for the Firsco Railroad said at Little Rock, Ark., that the line was removing "white" signs in rooms formerly reserved only for white passengers.

FLORIDA — The ICC ruling brought little change in Florida's capital city of Tallahassee. The Seaboard Airline Railroad took down the white sign over the door of its main waiting room and changed the sign over the former Negro waiting room to read: "Colored Intra-state."

There was no change of "white" and "colored" signs at the airport or at either of the city's two bus stations.

LOUISIANA — Gov. Kennon ordered all officials to continue rigid enforcement of state laws requiring separation of the races on public travel conveyances within state borders. He said the ICC order violated a 1833 Supreme Court decision.

MISSISSIPPI — Signs dividing the races remained up in rail and bus stations in Jackson, Gulfport and Greenwood, Miss. Police will be used to enforce the city's stand in Jackson, if necessary, officials said.

NORTH CAROLINA — At Asheville, the Southern Railway has removed "Colored Waiting Room" signs at its passenger terminal. Conductors have been verbally instructed to make no segregation designations on trains carrying interstate passengers.

Separate waiting rooms, rest rooms and eaitng facilities at Union Bus station remained although bus lines have complied with the ICC order.

SOUTH CAROLINA — Waiting rooms at the Union Railway station at Columbia have been partly desegregated. The rooms formerly reserved for white people only show signs saying "Waiting Rooms". The waiting rooms for Negroes have signs reading "'colored Intrastate Passengers".

A similar sign is in evidence at the Seaboard Airline Railroad station several blocks away. Bus stations are also complying with the ICC directive.

TENNESSEE—Nashville, Knoxville and other cities discarded segreagation rules at stations without incident.

VIRGINIA — Richmond's three railroad stations took three different courses of action.

All signs pertaining to racial segregation were removed at the Broad Street Station which serves the Atlantic Coast Line and the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad.

At the South Richmond station, the "white" sign was changed to "Waiting Room". The "colored" sign became Waiting Room for Colored Intrastate Passengers."

At the Main Street station, used by the Seaboard Airline Railroad and the Chesapeake and Ohio, the traditional signs designating separate waiting rooms were left in place. C &C officials, who control the station, said they are "studying the matter."

Southern Negroes Back Integration 3-2 in Poll

Gallup Survey Shows 6-1 Vote For I. C. C. Segregated Travel Ban

PRINCETON, N. J., Feb. 27.—The Supreme Court's historic integration decision has directly confronted the forty million people of the South with a problem as grave and unsettling as they have ever had to face.

On the one hand, an overwhelming majority of the South's thirty million whites—as reported yesterday—are bitterly opposed to the idea of integration with the Negro.

On the other hand, there are the South's ten million Negroes. How do they feel on this vital issue? Do they really want to be integrated?

The Negroes in the South share a common desire to give their children the best possible education and to obtain for their race the treatment which they consider to be in keeping with "the American way of life."

Fear Repercussions

But thoughts of integration with the South's vehemently anti-integration whites have caused many a Negro to view with misgivings the possible repercussions when and if the time comes to "mix in."

In addition, just the idea of such a radical departure—for both races—from an accepted Southern way of life has left many Negroes honestly perplexed, confused and wary of precipitate action.

Recently, this reporter spent some time in the Southern states, talking to persons from all segments of the Southen population and working with local reporters from the institute's field staff. We were seeking to determine the "why" of the South's feelings on the segregation problem.

Favors Integration, 3 to 2

What does the Southern Negro want? Results of our interviewing show that by a 3-to-2 ratio he wants to have an integrated educational system. About one Negro in nine at this time is undecided.

Negro sentiment is more strongly in favor of ending segregation in waiting rooms, buses and trains. The recent Interstate Commerce Commission ruling which outlawed segregated travel between states is approved today—among Negroes—by a vote of 6 to 1. Only about one Negro in twenty-five is undecided on this point.

The questions that we asked and their results:

"The United States Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?

Idealism and Practicality

Behind the opinions on each side of the picture—the case for integration as well as that for continued segregation—there is a mixture of idealism and practicality.

Those Negroes who favor integration do so mainly for what one might term "idealistic" reasons—the idea that "all men are created equal" or that "We were all made alike, weren't we?"

Other Negroes who favor integration have the opinion that such a move would help their children get a better education or generally increase the Negro's material comforts. Their viewpoint, by and large, is based on "practical" reasons.

"I'm for it," stated a sixty-four-year-old chauffeur from Charleston, S. C., "I think the children will get a better education. As it is now in the South, the colored children don't get as good as the white."

A fifty-two-year-old Atlanta furniture assembler had the following to say about segregation in trains, buses and waiting rooms: "I travel a good bit and some places you go there are no places for colored people. Why, it's a terrible pressure. Our street car service is an example of what we have to go through. There just seems no sense to it."

The case for continued segregation in the schools—a view held by roughly one Negro in three—again has this mixture of idealism and practicality somewhere in its background.

Fear for Children

The main difference is that in the vote for integration, the idealism predominates, whereas in the vote for segregation, practicality is the prime reason. In other words, the possibility of Negro children receiving unequal treatment from white teachers, the threat of trouble and violence when the schools are mixed, and—in some cases—the good chance that most Negro teachers would lose their jobs.

"I wouldn't like it," said a sixty-two-year-old widow from Raleigh, N. C. "Why? Because it would be dangerous—we've never mixed before. I like our way of schools and I think the white people would rise up against it. I think the whites seem to have something against us."

Fear Loss of Jobs

"I think it would throw the colored teachers out of work," commented the wife of a T. V. A. employee in Tuscumbia, Ala. "I just don't think the mixed races would get along together."

Behind the vote for the status quo there is also a small amount of idealism—a desire to "keep things as they always was"—which is seen in the following viewpoint of a school teacher from Augusta, Ga.:

"I'm against it. I have never lived in any other section of the country—I was born and reared here. There are certain things I'm accustomed to and I feel we have done pretty well so far."

I. C. C. Ruling

As the results indicate, the opposition to integration comes primarily in the matter of mixed schools. On the question of ending segregation in waiting rooms and on public conveyances, only one Negro in seven is opposed to such a move. Again, this opposition is provoked mainly by what might result from such action and not because of any principle involved.

Basic to the difference in the size of the disapproval vote on the two questions is the fact that on the two questions is the fact that on the first count, the children are involved, wheras on the second, it is mainly an adult problem. Negroes feel that they can cope with integration difficulties when they are on the scene, but fear the treatment their children might receive in school when they are away from parental guidance and influence.

Age, Education Factors

The stand that a Southern Negro takes on integration depends to some extent on his schooling, his age and whether he lives on a farm or in a city.

Roughly nine out of ten Negroes between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-nine and about the same proportion with college training favor an end to school segregation. Those with grade school educations, those living on farms, and those fifty years of age and over are considerably less in favor of integration.

An indication of the problem facing the Southern white, however, is that in every group of any size in the Negro population and in all parts of the South, there are more persons wanting to be integrated than wanting to remain segregated.

L. & N. Sets Integration Of Interstate Riders

Courier-Journal
Sat. 1-7-56

Changes Due by Tuesday To End Segregation In All but Coaches for Intrastate Travel

"White" and "Colored" signs in Louisville & Nashville Railroad trains will be removed before Tuesday, marking the end of racial segregation of interstate passengers.

This was one of several changes announced by the L. & N. yesterday in conformity with an order from the Interstate Commerce Commission which takes effect Tuesday.

Louisville, Ky.

R. C. Parsons, L. & N. vice-president and general manager, yesterday instructed railroad employees that:

1. All signs designating passenger space by race will be removed from trains.

2. The practice of requiring Negro interstate passengers to change from one coach to another when entering "Jim Crow" states will be discontinued.

3. Interstate passengers will no longer be seated on the basis of their race.

To Meet State Conditions

However, separated sitting places will be provided in at least one coach for Negro passengers traveling within the state, he said.

This must be done, Parsons said, to comply with Kentucky law which requires racial segregation of interstate passengers.

"We're in the middle on this thing," commented Parsons. He noted that the I.C.C. order applies only to passengers traveling from one state to another.

There will be "no change in our present practices" in dining facilities at stations, said Parsons. These eating places are run by a concessionaire, Union News Company, and are not subject to I.C.C. regulations, he said.

A spokesman for the news company said it will continue to operate separate dining facilities for whites and Negroes at the 10th Street Station, Greyhound Bus Terminal, and the Suburban Bus Terminal, Second and Liberty.

There'll be no change in conditions at the Greyhound Bus Terminal here, said Southeastern Greyhound Lines president H. Vance Greenslit, Lexington.

"We make no attempt to enforce segregation now" in either buses or in the terminal waiting room, he said. Present signs on the two waiting rooms labeled "White" and "Colored" will remain.

Bus Lines Not Affected

Unlike the railroads, bus companies have not been specifically ordered by I.C.C. to take down such signs.

"We will not try, and we have not tried, to maintain segregated waiting rooms," said Greenslit. However, in practice, persons using the bus terminal "have segregated themselves," he commented.

The last sign of segregation disappeared six months ago at the Illinois Central Railroad's station at Fort Knox, its agent, W. M. Beard, said yesterday.

At the request of Army authorities at Fort Knox (where no segregation is permitted), a sign designating a separate waiting room for "colored" was removed, and the room closed, Beard said.

2 Others To Comply

At least two other railroads operating in the South said they intend to comply with the I.C.C. ruling by Tuesday.

The Southern Railway and the Richmond, Fredericksburg, & Potomac Railroad said they would comply.

The Baltimore & Ohio, which operates in Maryland and West Virginia, said it had no problem; that segregated facilities had long been abolished.

The Chesapeake & Ohio, which operates in Kentucky and Virginia, said it did not have much of a problem. There is no segregation on the trains. The mechanism of conforming with the I.C.C. decree on waiting room facilities and complying with State segregation laws was under discussion, a spokesman said.

The Southern Railway, which operates between Washington and the Deep South, said the segregation signs on its waiting rooms would come down as far as interstate travelers were concerned. However, the Southern operates in many states with segregation laws and these would have to be observed with respe to intrastate travel.

Bus Driver Given Beating By 2 Soldiers

In Serious Condition At Fort Campbell

Fort Campbell, Ky., Feb. 27 (AP)—A Southeastern Greyhound bus driver was reported in "very serious" condition at a military hospital today after an attack by two passengers.

Witnesses told military authorities that Hugh Everette Williams, Jr., 32, Nashville, was beaten by two Negro soldiers who boarded the bus at nearby Hopkinsville, Ky. The bus driver was on the way from Evansville, Ind., to Nashville.

The provost marshal's office here said the investigation has been turned over to its Criminal-Investigation Division. No arrests were made immediately

Officials said several soldiers boarded the bus at Hopkinsville yesterday morning and that two of the group attacked Williams as he stood outside the door at the Fort Campbell bus stop.

One of the assailant knocked the driver to the ground and the other "stomped" him, witnesses said. The two then left the scene in a taxicab.

The driver, Hugh E. Williams Jr., 32, Nashville, was assaulted as he stood by the door of his bus to let passengers off at Fort Campbell. He is listed as in a serious condition.

Police said they were informed the third or fourth soldier to get off the bus knocked Mr. Williams down and at least one other soldier jumped on him with both feet.

Officers quoted other passengers on the bus as saying the soldiers had boarded the bus at Hopkinsville, Ky. They said the soldiers "rushed" the bus and Mr. Williams had asked them to stand back and be orderly in boarding.

Students Freed After Ignoring Dixie Bus Law

38b

By JOHN E. ROUSSEAU

NEW ORLEANS—Municipal Judge Andrew G. Bucaro Thursday night found all seventy-two Dillard and Xavier University students not guilty of disturbing the peace on a public service bus. Four white attorneys, Charles Denechaud Jr., Leon Cambon, Robert E. LeCorgne Jr. and Ralph N. Jackson, pleaded the case.

Bus Driver Francis Roux and white passenger James J. Serpas refused to testify against the students saying, "Theirs was just a normal reaction after a basketball gime." Patrolman Edgar Rodriquez volunteered to sign the affidavit but was unable to identify a girl whom he said led the disturbance caused by removing a jim-crow seating sign.

STATE JIM-CROW LAWS coupled with the presence of the one white passenger on a public service shuttle bus Wednesday night caused the arrest of three students and their friends who were en route home from a basketball game between Dillard and Xavier universities. All were charged with "disturbing the peace by being loud and boisterous" except one Dillard student, who was charged with "inciting a riot."

All were paroled to Dr. Albert W. Dent, president of Dillard University.

According to police, the students boarded the bus on South Carrollton Avenue, one-half block from Xavier University where the game was played. The driver, Francis Roux, 36, 606 Tucker Street, and one white passenger, James J. Serpas, 631 North Alexander Street, were on the bus.

Roux told police one of the students removed the jim-crow "screen," a small wooden partition which divides white and Negro passenger seating areas, and other Negro students took seats in all parts of the bus. He quoted the state law that if there is one white passenger on a bus, the races must be separated.

POLICE SAY Roux complained that his remonstrations with the students led to general cat-calling and confusion and their refusal to comply, so he stopped the bus near South Carrollton and Tulane and contacted his supervisor.

Five patrol wagons went to the scene and transported the students to the Third District police station.

Records disclosed that fifty were female and that sixty-one were listed as Dillard students. A check with Xavier University brought information that four students from that institution were involved.

This is the second mass arrest of Negroes in New Orleans for disregarding the jim-crow seating signs on buses. It is recalled that in 1946 some twenty-five Negroes were hauled off to jail while en route home from an East-West baseball game in Pelican Stadium.

Xavier Group In Disturbance Over Segregation

NEW ORLEANS.—(INS)— Seventy-three college students who were arrested Wednesday night, Jan. 4, after a disturbance on a New Orleans bus have been cleared of all charges. 38b

The students, from Xavier college and Dillard university, were arrested after a dispute involving the removal of a sign in the bus which designated where Negroes were to sit.

The driver of the bus, Francis Roux, called police when the students failed to heed his request to make room for a white passenger.

Four officers were sent to the scene, but their efforts to quiet the students were met with loud guffaws. They closed the doors of the bus and called for reinforcements.

The students were taken to a station and booked for disturbing the peace and loud and boisterous conduct. They were paroled several hours later to Dr. Albert W. Dent, president of Dillard.

One of the students, Fanny Carver, 17, was charged with inciting a riot, but Judge Andrew G. Bucaro said he found no evidence that any one person was responsible for the disturbance.

The judge remarked that the incident was the result of a "frolicsome mood" brought on by a basketball game between the two schools. The students had just left the game when they boarded the bus.

The disturbance was touched off by an argument over a segregation law requiring Negroes to sit in the rear of public vehicles.

Police arrested the students following the altercation between them and a white bus driver and a white passenger Wednesday night. The students were returning from a basketball game between Xavier and Dillard university.

All but one of the students, Frannie Travis, 17, were charged with disturbing the peace and being loud and boisterous. She was accused of inciting a riot.

The bus driver, Francis Roux of (606 Tucker St.) Jefferson parish told police that the argument started when the white passenger, James Serpas, took one of several signs reading "colored patrons only" and moved it back to another seat.

The signs are moved according to the number of white and Negro passengers on a bus and the seats available for them.

Roux reported that when Serpas moved the sign behind him. "Several of the students just laughed at him and took the sign and threw it on the floor."

The bus driver said he asked the students to refrain from doing so because removal of the signs is contrary to company policy but they laughed at him and created a general disturbance.

Roux added that he stopped the bus at a filling station and called police.

Patrolman Edward Kennedy, one of four officers who responded to the call, reported he tried to question the students but was met with "riotous laughter."

Kennedy said that Miss Travis made a remark which was unintelligible to the officers but which caused the students to laugh and create an uproar.

Kennedy said he then called for police reinforcements. Four squads of officers were sent to the scene and they herded the students off the bus into patrol wagons.

Bus Driver, Lone White Rider Refuse To Sign Affidavits

Weekly Sat. 1-14-56 p. 1

New Orleans, La.

Justice refused to bow here last week when police officers investigating reasons for a flooredlegiate students and their friend "Jim-Crow" sign subjected 72 col-to criminal confinement following a "harmless" laugh which they classified as an attempt to incite a riot aboard a city bus.

Leaving the heated excitement of a basketball game between Xavier and Dillard universities just a half block away at the XU gym to board a Public Service bus at S. Carrollton and Washington, it was evident that the excitement of an athletic conquest is not so quickly forgotten.

Although all but one were paroled more than two hours after being carted away in five patrol cars around 10:30 p. m. last Wednesday in full focus of rolling television cameras, the sad and tragic beginning of a policeman's sworn vengeance to make a guest of the "laughing lady" ended on a happy note some 24 hours later when a municipal district court judge dismissed charges of boisterousness, disturbing the peace and inciting a riot, realizing that such was a normal reaction after a basketball game.

Those arrested after what was considered an aftermath of Xavier's stunning 84-45 defeat of Dillard, were mostly Dillard students with about six from XU and the remainder their friends. Several of the students were out-of-towners. Names and comments were withheld by officials of both universities.

The lone person not immediately paroled was identified as Miss Fannie Carver, 17, co-ed, who was booked with inciting a riot as well as disturbing the peace when the humorous and ticklish situation got the better of her nature, and she laughed.

The entire group emerged from Judge Andrew G. Bucaro's court Thursday night acquitted of any wrongdoing. Said he: "Last night you probably had a reason to behave in such a manner after the game, but kindly refrain from doing the same tonight."

First reports of the incident which brought a wave of indignation from Negro leaders and citizens, revealed that words were exchanged between bus driver Francis Roux, 36, and several of the Negro passengers over the racial divisional sign, although only one white passenger was on the bus at the time. From all indications, the driver lost the vocal warfare and reported the incident to a bus line dispatcher, who in turn summoned police. One source held that the driver allegedly wanted to have Miss Carver arrested, and a loud chorus rang out: "You'll have to take all of us."

When the officers arrived and began questioning Miss Carver among others, she began to laugh, causing the entire group to respond in unison. Sources related that the annoyed officer said that she would become their special guest.

The group was placed in jail cells, according to reports, with the exception of several juveniles, who sat in chairs throughout the unusual ordeal. It marked one of the few times in the history of the city that students were routed to jail like criminals for apparently failing to be humble and submissive. Observers felt that the incident was one which could have been handled without the fanfare and notoriety it received if clear thinking had been exercised. It is believed that the action was done in a more demanding tone rather than the police informational method.

The bus driver admitted at the trial that there was no disturbance, "just the normal reaction after a game" until the police officers arrived. This statement obviously points up the tactics employed in probing for the origin of what actually took place. Equally as prominent was the comment of James J. Serpas, the only white passenger aboard the bus at the time, who said: "I didn't bother anybody, and nobody bothered me."

Although both refused to sign affidavits accusing the defendants, Patrolman Edgar Rodriguez and two other officers volunteered to swear to the affidavits.

The group was represented by a battery of four white attorneys.

Laugh At Police; 72 Jailed At NO

NEW ORLEANS — Laughing at policemen in the presence of whites by Negroes can be a "very" serious offense, or so it appeared here last Wednesday night when 72 city bus-riding collegiate students and their friends were arrested shortly after leaving a basketball game at Xavier university and boarding the public transit a half block away.

Although all but one were paroled almost two hours after being carted away in five patrol cars around 10:30 p m, the story had a happy ending about 24 hours after the incident when a municipal district court judge dismissed charges of boisterousness, disturbing the peace and inciting a riot, realizing that such was a normal reaction after athletic games.

Riotous Laughter

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

NEW ORLEANS — It's no crime to laugh, even in New Orleans, policemen discovered Thursday.

This determination was made after New Orleans police arrested 71 college students for "general disturbance" and one girl student for "inciting to riot."

Dr. Albert Dent, president of Dillard University, gave the AFRO the following version of the "laughable riot:"

Xavier University and Dillard University, two city rivals, had played a basketball game, which Xavier won 84-45.

Seventy-two students from the schools leaving the game, streamed onto a bus that had only one passenger, James J. Serpas, white.

The students were gay and in a festive mood and they were jammed into a bus that had a capacity of 41 passengers.

Hence, many of the students were seated and standing in a section "reserved for whites."

The driver, Francis Roux, stopped the bus and called for his supervisor, who called the police.

The police arrived. Their statements caused the students to laugh.

MISS TARVER, 17, a Dillard student, police charged:

"Said something that made the others laugh."

The police called for the patrol wagon and took the students to a station where 71 were booked for "disturbing the peace."

Miss Tarver was charged with "inciting to riot."

* * *

DR. DENT was called to the station where all but the Tarver girl were released immediately in his custody by City Councilman Glenn P. Glasser.

Later, a judge ordered the girl's release.

A night court hearing was held in which the white passenger, Serpas, testified that "the student were doing nothing wrong and certainly didn't disturb me."

The policemen insisted that the students "laughed" at them.

The magistrate laughed, too, as he ordered all charges dismissed.

Senate Passes Race Measure In Louisiana

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

BATON ROUGE, La., June 11 (AP)—Without debate or opposition, the Louisiana Senate today voted final legislative passage of a five-bill program designed to weave a protective web around racial segregation.

The segregation bills passed would:

1. Withdraw permission for suits against such public agencies as state parks commission, city and parish park commissions, the state board of education, Louisiana State University Board, and parish school boards, as a constitutional amendment it would be subject to popular vote in November. Passed 37-0.

2. Place public parks and recreation facilities under the police power of the state. Passed 36-0.

3. Guarantee segregated travel waiting rooms, requiring a segregated system for intrastate passengers and lumping interstate passengers with colored intrastate. Passed 36-0.

4. Require applicants for entrance at state college and universities to submit certificates from their school and parish superintendents, proving eligibility and good moral character. Passed 36-0.

5. Eliminate compulsory school attendance requirements at any school forced to integrate. Passed 36-0.

National Ruling Ignored

Courier Pitts. Pa.

By JOHN E. ROUSSEAU

Sat. 8-11-56

NEW ORLEANS—Some 587 new laws in Louisiana went into effect Aug. 1, one of which openly defied the clear-cut ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission, outlawing racial segregation of railroad, bus and airplane passengers in waiting rooms and in terminals.

Nine hours before the state law became effective, jim crow signs were hung in this city's new Union Passenger Terminal Station!

The new law, based upon what Louisiana legislators believed to be a loophole in the ICC ruling, separates white intrastate from Negro intrastate passengers by providing waiting rooms for each race. However, all interstate passengers—Negro and white — are placed together in the same waiting room designated for "Negro Intrastate Passengers."

FOLLOWING THE ICC's ruling which set a January, 1955, deadline for removing jim-crow signs and for eliminating segregated waiting rooms and facilities, the Union Passenger Terminal which serves all railroads entering New Orleans, removed its signs, but Negro and white passengers, with few exceptions, continued segregating themselves.

The Louisiana Legislature in May passed a state law which was signed by Governor Earl K. Long and signs were replaced last week.

JIM-CROW SIGNS now hang in the waiting rooms, over the rest rooms, over the drinking fountains and even over facilities provided for UPT employes in the yards where coaches are cleaned and trains are made up.

Efforts to contact UPT Manager Clarence J. Wallace by telephone before press time were futile. However, an attache, Carl J. Lawyer, told the Courier, "I am not authorized to make statements to newspapers."

A check of the UPT discloses that 60 benches are provided for white intrastate passengers and 39 for all interstate and Negro intrastate passengers.

White Man Beats Lads With Screen

Pittsburgh Courier 8-11-56

Two New Orleans teenagers said they were brutally assaulted by a white passenger aboard a St. Claude bus while the driver allegedly held them to be beaten with a seating sign last week.

The two youths--John Larson, 13, 5807 N. Galvez and Lawrence Carter, 15, 5921 N. Galvez--were still showing visible signs of the beating when interviewed by a Louisiana Weekly newsman several days later.

Both admitted to being taken off the bus later by police from the Fifth District. According to one of the arresting officers at the Fifth District the white man involved was booked with disturbing the peace and another Negro was arrested for interfering with officers. He refused to give the names of the men involved.

According to one of the boys' parents, both of the youths were hospitalized. The Carter boy suffered an ugly cut under the right eye, a large knot on his neck, and bodily bruises. The other youth suffered a cut on the arm and bruises about the body.

The case was reportedly thrown out of Municipal court when the youths failed to appear. Both were undergoing treatments at the time of the trial a parent told a reporter.

The youths said that they boarded the St. Claude bus in the downtown section heading for home about 7 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 26. They said that a white man who appeared to have been drinking began calling them unspeakable names while the bus driver and another white passenger laughed.

When the youths showed resentment over the filthy name calling, the passenger allegedly began beating them. And the bus driver, they said, came back after stopping the bus to give assistance in the assault. The boys said that two Negro women passengers in the bus began screaming. And were not permited to get off the bus when they attempted to get off. They said the bus passed up several passengers as the white man kicked and attempted to throw them out of the window of the bus.

Files Claim Against Bus Co. Who Stranded Child

Times-Pic. New Orleans, La.
Oct. 6-16-56

A claim has been filed by Attorney Louis Berry of New Orleans and Alexandria against the Continental Trailways Bus company in behalf of Mrs. Ella Mae McCain growing out of the actions of a bus driver who put her 11-year-old daughter off the bus miles away from her ticketed-destination, it was learned here this week.

According to Attorney Berry, Mrs. McCain's daughter, Margaret Rose McCain, boarded the bus at Houston, Texas bound for Glenmora, La. When the bus reached Starks, La., the lawyer said, the bus driver called the child to the front of the bus, putting her off there claiming that she was making noise on the bus.

Berry explained that the child was left stranded at Starks without money and without knowing what to do. However, he continued, a colored man observed the child on the highway crying. After hearing the child's pitiful story, the man drove her to her nearest relative some 40 miles away.

Attorney Berry is now preparing a lawsuit to be filed against the bus company for damages arising out of this horrible experience.

Louisiana Defies Order For Depot Desegregation

Governor Says I.C.C. Ruling Is Illegal; Other Southern Places Comply Quietly

Wed. 1-11-56

From Wire Dispatches

The Governor of Louisiana yesterday called a federal order to integrate public waiting rooms illegal under a 123-year-old United States Supreme Court opinion. But many Southern cities quietly complied with it.

Yesterday was the deadline for the Interstate Commerce Commission's directive to tear down the "White" and "Colored" designations of waiting rooms at railway and bus stations and airports.

Cites 1833 Case

But Governor Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana ordered all State, Parish, and municipal officials in his state to continue rigid enforcement of State laws requiring separate facilities for the races at such stations.

He said the I.C.C. order directly violated a Supreme Court opinion in an 1833 civil-rights case to the effect that the regulation of accommodations and facilities for public conveyances was reserved to the states under the 10th Amendment. Kennon said that policy had never been amended.

Mississippi also resisted the order, but less dramatically. In Jackson, the capital, railroad and bus officials had taken down the white and colored waiting-room designations, but City officials replaced them with their own under local segregation laws. Similar action was taken in other Mississippi cities.

Segregates Intrastate

At Hattiesburg, Miss., the Southern Railway put up a sign reading: "Colored Waiting Room for Intrastate Passengers" over the old colored waiting room. The I.C.C. had not attempted to regulate segregation of passengers in travel within a state, but the interstate order presented a ticklish task of separating local from "through" passengers. There was no report of any Negroes using the formerly all-white waiting room at Hattiesburg.

In Birmingham, Ala., traditionally one of the strongest pro-segregation centers of the South, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad discarded segregation rules at its station without incident.

Atlanta Has No Trouble

An "intrastate" waiting room for Negroes was designated at the Terminal Station in Birmingham as in Hattiesburg. The same action was taken at Charlotte, N. C., and Greenville, S. C., also points in the Southern Railway system.

In Atlanta one Negro woman, Lurlene Barber, West Point, Ga., sat in the formerly all-white waiting room at the big Terminal Railroad Station. She said she missed her train and would wait for another. Her presence caused no trouble.

At the Atlanta Union Station, signs were taken down, but an attendant said several Negro travelers inquired which was the "colored" waiting room and took seats in the old segregated area. One Negro man, however, sat for an hour and a half in the formerly white waiting room. Atlanta airport and bus terminal spokesmen said segregation had always been "informal" at those places and was continuing on that basis.

Washrooms Desegregated

In Richmond, Va., the sign at one of the two waiting rooms in Richmond's Main Street Station used to read "Colored." Yesterday it was "Colored Intrastate Passengers."

The same procedure was adopted with respect to the colored washrooms. In the waiting room formerly reserved for whites, signs designating it as such were taken down. The word, "white," also was removed from the signs over washrooms.

At Richmond's Broad Street Station, all "white" and "colored" signs were removed. All passengers using that station are presumed to be interstate passengers, officials said.

Governor Calls I.C.C. Order to End Separate Rail-Bus Waiting Rooms Illegal

ATLANTA, Jan. 10 (UP)—The Governor of Louisiana branded as illegal today a Federal order to integrate public waiting rooms, but many Southern cities quietly complied with it.

Today was the deadline for carrying out the Interstate Commerce Commission's directive to tear down the "white" and "colored" designations of waiting rooms at railway and bus stations and airports. P.19-C

However, Gov. Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana ordered all state, parish (county) and municipal officials in his state to continue rigid enforcement of state law requiring separate facilities for the races at such stations.

The Tenth Amendment provides that powers not delegated to the Federal Government by the Constitution are reserved to the states.

Mississippi also resisted the order, but less dramatically. In Jackson, the capital, railroad and bus officials had taken down the white and colored waiting room resignations. But city officials replaced them with their own under local segregation laws. Similar action was taken in other Mississippi cities.

went into a tavern and "talked to some people."

Mrs Alexander said the driver returned to the bus with a group of men, and a white woman told her, "You're going to get killed," and advised her to move from the seat, which she did.

Mrs Alexander related, a white man got on the bus with a gun in his hand and asked, "Where is that bad woman?"

She said the bus driver told her, "We're going to burn your body up. You obey our laws down here." The bus driver referred to the Emmett Till lynching to make his point clear as to how defiant Negroes are treated in the south.

Mrs Alexander said she will file charges against the Greyhound Lines. The Interstate Commerce Commission rule bans segregation in interstate travel.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 6.—(UP)—Seventy-two Negro basketball students Friday were freed of charges they disturbed the peace in a protest over segregation on a public bus. P.7

Municipal Judge Andrew G. Bucaro Thursday night found the Negroes, almost all Dillard University students, innocent.

The incident occurred Wednesday night following the Dillard-Xavier University basketball game. The white bus driver said he ordered the Negroes to replace the dividing sign but was answered with jeers and catcalls.

Memphis, Tenn.

Regulations of the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., require that the dividing sign remain in place if there is one white passenger. Negroes must sit behind the sign.

Judge Bucaro, in acquitting the Negroes, said they probably had reason to be in a lightheartened mood following the Dillard-Xavier University basketball game Wednesday.

"Kindly refrain," he said, "from doing the same tonight."

The bus driver, Francis Roux, 36, testified there was no disturbance, "just the normal reaction after a game," until police arrived. Mr. Roux had stopped the bus and called his dispatcher who notified police.

The only white passenger aboard at the time, James J. Serpas, said, "I didn't bother anybody and nobody bothered me."

Three policemen testified that when they attempted to question some of the Negroes, a girl began laughing which set the others into guffaws.

"They were all laughing and joking like it was a circus or something, like the police were out there to help old ladies across the street," said Patrolman Joseph Madere.

Judge Bucaro agreed with the four white defense attorneys that there was no conclusive proof that any single person was responsible for setting off the disturbance.

ST LOUIS, Missouri — A former St Louis woman, Mrs W M. Alexander, now a Detroit Evangelist, charged that her life was threatened when she refused to give up her seat while traveling as an interstate passenger in Louisiana.

According to Mrs Alexander, she was riding a Greyhound bus when the driver ordered her to give up her seat at a stop between New Orleans and Hammond.

She said she was seated over half way to the rear of the bus when she was ordered to move, but she refused.

She said the driver of the bus noticed an NAACP pin on her coat and told her to remove it, saying, "That don't mean a damn thing to us here." She said the driver then became angry and cursed her, he then got off the bus and

Files $3050 Damage Suit In State Bus Incident

ALEXANDRIA - A $3,050 damage suit was filed against the Continental Bus System here last Friday in the Ninth Judicial District court by the mother of a 11-yer-old girl allegedly forced from the bus before reaching her destination.

The suit was filed by Mrs. Ella Mae McCain of Houston, Texas through Attorney Louis Berry, her legal counsel. The legal action was taken in behalf of Mrs. McCain's daughter Margaret Rose.

The plaintiff said that her daughter boarded the bus in Houston for Glenmora, La., last May 31. The petition contends that the child remained seated in the rear of the bus until the bus reached Starks, La. when the bus driver summoned her to the front of the vehicle and ordered her off the bus claiming that she was noisy and disturbing the peace.

According to the legal document, the young child was left stranded on the highway in spite of the ticket which gave her the right to transportation to Glenmora. The child became hysterical and began running behind the bus when a man in a truck realizing the plight of the girl drove her to the home of a relative in DeQuincy, La., the petition stated.

Pointing out that this was the first time the child had traveled alone from her home, the petitioner said the experience caused her illness and required the services of a doctor.

The damages were itemized as; medical expense, $50; and pain suffering and emotional upset, $3,000.

Miss. commission vows to maintain travel segregation

Afro-American 1-13

JACKSON, Miss., (AP)—As "White" and "Colored" signs were being removed from waiting rooms at railroad and bus stations throughout the state, Mississippi Public Service Commission declared it will defy an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission to integrate by Jan. 10.

Sentiment among lawmakers indicates an attempt will be made this week to pass such a law.

The question may boil down to this: Does the state or the ICC have control of depots within the state? Can Mississippi enforce tradition segregation laws despite the ruling?

In Laurel, Mayor A. S. Scott said if railroads and bus officials pull down the segregation signs, the city would put up its own, as Jackson plans

The Jackson order against integration will apply to all passengers, whether interstate or intrastate.

Illinois Central workers in Jackson scraped away and painted over "colored" and "white" signs today on waiting rooms and rest rooms.

City police put up their own—large white signs with black letters, attached to heavy metal stands. The signs read:

"Waiting room, white only," or "Waiting room, colored only." They are signed "By order police department."

It may boil down to the question: Does the state or the ICC have jurisdiction over the stations.

Depots to Stay Segregated, Says Jackson Police Chief

Times Picayune 1-10

New Orleans La.

JACKSON, Miss., (AP)—Police Chief W. D. Rayfield said Monday the city will enforce segregation at railroad and bus stations in Jackson despite a federal agency ruling knocking out segregated waiting rooms for interstate passengers.

Times 1-10-56

The city is painting its own "white only" and "colored only" signs to replace signs which railroad officials plan to pull down late tonight.

The situation among bus companies was uncertain. Trailways officials declined comment. An official of Greyhound said he had no order to change segregation signs and would do nothing unless an order was received.

The Interstate Commerce Commission ruled that interstate passengers — those traveling between states—cannot be segregated in waiting rooms. The order did not affect passengers traveling only within Mississippi.

Chief Rayfield said his segregation enforcement would apply to all passengers, regardless of their destinations.

Policemen will be stationed at the Illinois Central Railroad depot to enforce segregation, he said.

IC officials said today its signs designating separate waiting rooms for Negroes and whites would be taken down late tonight. The ICC ruling goes into effect tomorrow.

Rayfield's action apparently had approval of the Jackson city council. Mayor Allen Thompson said he would have a statement later today.

A number of Mississippi legislators have demanded laws requiring segregation in railroad and bus stations despite the ICC ruling.

Miss. Stations To Stay Segregated, Towns Say

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 9 (AP)—Officials of several Mississippi towns said today their railroad and bus stations will remain segregated despite a federal ruling against segregating interstate passengers.

Atlanta Ga.

Jackson police put up segregation signs in the railroad station and a bus station today to enforce Mississippi's segregation laws.

Policemen will be stationed at the Illinois Central Railroad depot to enforce the city's stand if they are needed, Police Chief W. D. Rayfield said.

P. 3

Some other Mississippi city officials said they would take similar action if necessary.

Laurel, Gulfport and Greenwood are among cities which said train and bus stations will remain segregated.

The Interstate Commerce Commission ordered an end to segregated waiting rooms for interstate passengers. The order goes into effect tomorrow. It does not apply to passengers traveling only within a state.

(Union Station in Atlanta has already taken down segregation signs, according to Station Manager J. N. Neal. Atlanta Terminal Station still had the signs up Monday night. President Herbert W. Bondurant of Terminal could not be reached for comment.

(Both the Greyhound and Trailways bus stations still displayed waiting room signs. "We are still waiting on instructions," a Trailways spokesman said.)

Miss. Police Defy ICC; Replace Segregation Signs At Depots

Daily World Tues. 1-10-56

JACKSON, Miss—(INS)—City police Monday swiftly replaced signs at the Jackson Railroad depot calling for segregation in waiting agreas which were removed by the Illinois Central Railroad.

P. 1

The railroad removed the signs in compliance with a recent order of the Interstate Commerce Commission which instructed common carriers in Interstate Commerce to abolish racial segregation on carriers and in waiting rooms used by Interstate passengers.

Atlanta Ga.

The Mississippi Public Service Commission had ordered that railroads and bus lines in the state continue to enforce waiting room segregation in compliance with state law.

Monday, Illinois Central workers removed the "For Colored Only" signs at the depot, but Jackson police followed them and put up new signs. The police also put up segregation signs at the railways Bus Depit. The line had removed its signs several days ago. Original signs calling for waiting room segregation had been left in place at the Greyhound bus depot.

The Jackson Police Department said it would keep two policemen at the railroad depot and at the bus stations when the ICC "nonsegregation" order went into effect at midnight last night. The police assignments were ordered, the Department said, to "prevent any disturbance."

Signs Posted At Bus, Train Depots At Hattiesburg

HATTIESBURG, Miss., Jan. 27.—The city commission has passed an ordinance which bans mixing of whites and Negroes in waiting rooms at the local train station and bus terminal.

Violation of the new law would be a misdemeanor.

The ordinance, adopted Thursday afternoon by Mayor Moran Pope and Commissioners N. V. Carpenter and Fewell Thompson, states that minimum punishment for a violator would be a $10 fine. Maximum penalty is $100 and 30 days in jail.

Friday morning police installed large black-and-white signs at the bus terminal and the Southern Railway System depot. The signs, with painted black arrows, mark clearly the separate waiting rooms for colored and white travelers.

Mississippi Measures Would Apply To Intrastate Passengers

HOUSE VOTES UNANIMOUS

Legislation Will Go Before State Senate Next—Joint Session Set Monday For Budget Message

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss. Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 27. — Racial segregation in waiting rooms would be retained among passengers traveling intrastate—notwithstanding the Interstate Commerce Commission's desegregation order—under terms of three bills passed unanimously Friday by the Mississippi House of Representatives.

Their immediate transmittal to the Senate, which was in weekend adjournment, was prevented when Representative George Rogers of Warren County entered a reconsideration motion to determine whether the proposals include airports, as well as railroads and buses.

Broad Application

One of the measures covers a broader field than intrastate passengers in that it applies to "any person"—white or Negro—who "shall enter, frequent, occupy or use waiting rooms" for other than his own race.

Representative Luther Sims of Lowndes County handled the bills in the absence of Representative Hervie Hicks of Yazoo County, chairman of the Railroads Committee.

Railroads, bus companies or other common carriers of passengers would be subject to a daily fine of $1,000 for failure to provide segregated waiting rooms for intrastate passengers, and the same fine, plus one year in jail, for non-conformance with the proposed statute requiring separate toilet facilities for those passengers. It is assumed that additional facilities for interstate passengers would be left to the carriers to conform with the ICC order.

The broader bill is a two-pronged affair.

One section carries a fine of $1,000 and up to 60 days in jail for intrastate passengers who enter or attempt to enter waiting rooms not marked for their race.

Fines And Jail

The other section applies to "any person," passenger or visitor to a depot or terminal, who enters, frequents, occupies or uses the waiting room set aside for other than his own race. The violation is a misdemeanor and on conviction carries a maximum fine of $1,000 and imprisonment in jail for up to one year.

A bit of laughter ran through the House when Representative Dennis Baker of Panola County pointed out that the original draft of the first section would force a person to use a waiting room whether he wanted to or not. It would have applied to "any person who fails or refuses to enter" a segregated waiting room.

The bill was corrected by Representative Joel Blass of Stone County, to apply to "any person who enters or attempts to enter a waiting room not designated for his race."

Representative Chris Faser of Montgomery County, chairman of the Public Health Committee, steered to passage a House bill permitting oral prescription procedure for non - habit-forming narcotics.

The House concurred in a Senate amendment to its bill lowering from 20,000 to 15,000 the population of municipalities authorized to construct and operate municipal parking lots. It is designed to affect Columbus.

Coleman Says Segregation Will Continue

Montgomery, Ala
Wed. 11-14-56

ACKERMAN, Miss., Nov. 13 (AP) —Mississippi will continue to segregate the races on public conveyances despite today's U.S. Supreme Court ruling, Gov. J.P. Coleman declared.

"Our attitude about this decision will be the same as about the school segregation cases," said the governor, who was spending the day at his farm home.

Mississippi's public schools are still entirely segregated despite the high court's ruling. The legislature has provided for abolition of public schools if necessary to prevent erasure of color barriers there.

Coleman, who as attorney general drew up Mississippi's new segregation laws and then signed them when the people elected him governor, said he did not think today's ruling "will bring any change in Mississippi practices."

"This decision is based on the Alabama statute," he said. "Mississippi has an entirely new set of statutes, enacted in 1956. They are not involved."

Asked if he thought anyone would try to enforce the ruling against segregation on buses in Mississippi, Coleman said "anticipation would be a waste of time; we'll meet the situation as it arises."

Mississippi Defies ICC On Jim Crow

Defender Sat. 1-7-56 P. 1

JACKSON, Miss. — With trains, busses and waiting rooms scheduled to become integrated on Jan. 10, the Interstate Commerce Commission is busy removing "colored" and "white" signs from waiting rooms, but Gov.-elect J. C. Coleman says it will never happen in Mississippi.

Chicago Ill.

In conjunction with him, the Mississippi public service commission said: "We cannot prevent them from removing the signs, but we can and will prevent them from mixing the races in the depots.

The public service commission can fine any public utility $50 a day for defyng any order it issues and it plans to issue one on integration daily to prevent deseg-regation.

To back it, the state has a criminal law which prohibits mixing the races.

Coleman told the commission that the ICC order of integration is limited to the authority of the federal agency in that its rulings are administrative and not judical.

Many segregation bills await action

News Fri. 1-13-56

BY SAM JOHNSON

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 13—(AP)—A barrage of segregation bills waits today for action of the Mississippi Legislature.

Birmingham, Ala.

One bill would place a fine of $1000 a day against any railroad or bus company which failed to keep segregated waiting rooms for intrastate passengers. P. 3

Another bill is designated to prevent outside lawyers from handling segregation cases in state courts.

38b

THREE BILLS, taken together, apparently would form an attempt to prevent all integration in railroad and bus stations, whether passengers were traveling only within Mississippi or were crossing state lines.

Passengers who refuse to wait in rooms marked for their race could be fined a maximum of $1000 and sent to jail for one year.

Some of the bills were introduced to combat the Interstate Commerce Commission ruling that interstate passengers cannot be segregated in waiting rooms. The ICC order went into effect Jan. 10.

SEVERAL CITIES moved without waiting for further legislative action. State laws already require segregation, but enforcement of the laws is left to the Public Service Commission or to the cities.

Bills introduced during the last two days would allow the attorney general or any district attorney to seek indictments against violators.

Jackson police put up segregation signs after Illinois Central Railroad officials erased theirs. The City Council backed the action yesterday with an ordinance requiring segregation, regardless of the passenger's destination. Any person violating the ordinance could be fined $25 to $100 and sent to jail for 30 days.

THE RAILROAD and bus bills:

1. Would require carriers to provide separate accomodations for the races traveling intrastate. The waiting rooms would be marked "colored waiting room, intrastate passengers" or "white waiting room, intrastate passengers."

2. Would require railroads and bus companies to maintain separate waiting rooms and rest rooms, marked "colored" or "white" for intrastate passengers.

3. Would require all persons in intrastate travel to use rooms marked for them. The same bill also provides that "no white person . . ." and "no colored person . . ." can enter a room marked for the other race. This section does not differentiate between intrastate and interstate passengers.

TWO RELATED bills would:

Make it a misdemeanor to breach the peace in a place of business or in a public place and empower owners or managers of a business or a public place to refuse to serve, wait on or sell to any person for any reason the owner or manager thinks sufficient.

The proposed law against outside attorneys replaces a short section of the Mississippi Code which says:

"Any attorney or counselor at law of another state, in good standing, shall be permitted to appear and plead in any special cause in the courts of this state."

In the proposed new laws, the board of bar admissions would screen all out-of-state lawyers before allowing them to enter a case in Mississippi.

THE BILL STATES it to be the "public policy of the State of Mississippi that the practice of law before any court or administrative agency is a matter of privilege to be granted or refused by the state board of bar admissions and is not a matter or right . . ."

Before an out-of-state lawyer could enter a case, he would have to file with the board of bar admissions a sworn application setting out the cause of action and the nature of the case. He also would have to present evidence of good moral standing" . . . and shall further present evidence of his familiarity with the ethics, principles, customs, and usages of the legal profession of the State of Mississippi. . . ."

Fines For Violations Set In City Ordinance

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 13. — (AP)—The Jackson City Council has backed up its police department by setting fines for anyone violating segregation laws in railroad and bus stations.

Jackson police put up new segregation signs Tuesday after Illinois Central Railroad and Trailways bus workers took theirs down, obeying an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission against segregation of passengers traveling between states. P. 3

The city council's action sets fines of $25 to $100 or a 30-day jail sentence, or both, for violating segregation laws.

The council said "a sudden intermingling of the races necessarily involved in the common use of such waiting rooms and rest room facilities would likely result in disturbances, breaches of the peace, disorder and confusion.

The ordinance passed by the council requires separate waiting and rest rooms at transportation stations for the two races. The ordinance went into effect Thursday.

"The council of the City of Jackson owes the duty to its citizens, regardless of race, color, creed or station in life, to maintain good order and to prevent breaches of the peace," the council said.

Jackson, Miss., Jan. 27 (AP)—The Mississippi house of representatives today passed three bills designed to keep Negroes out of white waiting rooms and rest rooms in railroad and bus stations.

Chicago

The bills apply to all passengers, intrastate and interstate, despite the interstate commerce commission decision ruling out segregated facilities for interstate passengers—those traveling between states.

The bills received votes of 104-0, 103,0, and 104-0. The senate must act on them.

Ill.

Provide for Injunctions

The bills also require railroad and bus companies to maintain segregated rooms for intrastate passengers. This section of the bill does not apply to facilities for interstate passengers.

Failure or refusal to provide the segregated facilities could bring fines of $1,000 per day. And injunctions could be sought to force compliance.

To obey the proposed laws and also the ICC order, railroad and bus companies would have to provide there waiting rooms and six rest rooms.

One waiting room and two rest rooms would be for interstate passengers. This waiting room presumably would not be segregated. There also would be segregated waiting and rest rooms for intrastate passengers.

Held a Misdemeanor

Any person entering a room not marked for his race could be fined $1,000 and sent to jail for one year.

"It means there must be separate rest rooms for the races," said Rep. Luther Sims of Lowndes county, who steered the bills to passage.

"Anytime a colored man enters a whie rest room, he is [would be] guilty of a misdemeanor."

"The ICC has ruled we cannot have segregation . . .," Sims said. "We introduced these bills for the purpose of keeping our segregation . . . regardless of the ICC."

Two Negroes Arrested At Depot Here For Obeying ICC Ruling

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 30 (DSN)—Obeying the recent decision of the interstate Commerce Commission which caused the removal of segregation signs from the Illinois Central Railroad Depot, two Negroes were arrested here Saturday night.

Jackson, Miss.

The two Negroes were listed as Laverne Ephriam, a 24-year-old man from Detroit, Michigan, and 55-year-old, Mrs. Susie Ramsey, of Yazoo City, Mississippi.

Following the removal of the signs from the doors of the depot, the City of Jackson placed its own signs on the sidewalks facing the entrance of the depot with the sign before the former White Waiting room reading for White Only, and the one before the former Negro waiting room reading For Colored Only, with each sign having the additional words, "by order of the Police Department."

According to reports, the police said the woman paused, read the sign, "For White Only", smiled and entered the former White waiting room. The man read the sign then entered to take a seat.

The two Negroes were arrested and charged with violating the City Jimcrow Law. Both were released after posting cash bonds of $25 each.

GREENVILLE, Miss., March 31.—A charge of molesting a minor was dismissed against Clarence Hall, 39-year-old school bus driver, in City Court Friday.

Mr. Hall was fined $110 for assault and battery on Roy Burch, 12, and for disorderly conduct on the school bus. The disorderly conduct charge was sustained after passengers on the bus testified that Mr. Hall allowed children to steer the bus.

City Judge Earl Solomon dismissed the charge of molesting a minor, brought by Susan Dykes, 12-year-old seventh grader, after witnesses said the incident occurred outside the city limits and outside City Court jurisdiction.

Memphis
Sun. 4-1-56

The charges against Mr. Hall were brought March 26, after students said he had been drinking.

Roy Burch, seventh grade pupil at Bass Junior High School, said Mr. Hall slapped him after telling him to move back on the crowded bus. The bus driver denied slapping anyone and said that he did not know the boy.

Iris Walter, a Greenville High School student, said she smelled alcohol on Mr. Hall's breath and that he yelled at her after she told him "Anyone with common sense could tell that you have been drinking."

Another passenger, Carol Thompson, testified that she saw Mr. Hall allow an eighth grade pupil to steer the bus.

Capt. Marl Wilkinson, who arrested Mr. Hall, testified he smelled alcohol on the bus driver's breath. Mr. Wilkinson said a drunkometer test given Mr. Hall showed alcohol, but not sufficient to bring charges for driving while intoxicated.

James McIntyre, owner of Delta Coaches and Mr. Hall's employer, testified that he had spent more than an hour with the defendant before he left to pick up the school children. Mr. McIntyre said he had not smelled alcohol on Mr. Hall's breath.

Judge Solomon fined Mr. Hall on the two counts and told him "he should not have had one drop to drink before driving the bus."

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 10.—Signs dividing the races in railroad and bus stations remained in several cities today as officials insisted facilities would remain equal, despite a contrary ban by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

MONTGOMERY IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION

Group Formed To Support Bus Boycott Incorporates

Advertiser

A Negro organization formed six months ago to support Montgomery's bus boycott has been incorporated as a non-profit corporation to "improve the living conditions in the community."

The Montgomery Improvement Assn., whose primary function thus far has been to keep the boycott going and operate a motor pool to provide transportation for Negroes, has filed incorporation papers in Probate Court here.

Montgomery Ala.

Its directors are the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., president; The Rev. Ralph Abernathy, the Rev. J. W. Bonner, E. D. Nixon, the Rev. S. S. Seay, Dr. Moses Jones, Erna Dungee, the Rev. R. J. Glasco, the Rev. H. H. Hubbard and the Rev. H H Johnson.

Thursday 2-23-56

The incorporation papers mentioned the bus boycott only indirectly. Listed among the MIA's objectives was "respect for the individual in the use of public facilities."

The organization also aims to "improve the living conditions in the community and particularly in the area of housing health, education, sanitation and recreation."

It seeks to "encourage individuals to become first class citizens by securing the ballot and using it wisely," and to support "any and all other acts which will generally improve the city and county of Montgomery so that all of its citizens will receive all of the rights and privileges" guaranteed by the state and federal constitutions.

Bus Ride Assault Claimed

Daily World Thurs. 2-2-56 Atlanta, Ga.

RIVERHEAD, N. Y.—(SNS)— A suit for $500,000 was entered by an aged Negro nurse against a bus company because a white passenger allegedly beat the plaintiff up last summer on a trip between Atlanta and Montgomery, Ala.

The complaint was filed for Mrs. Anne Loftis, 63 of North Amityville. She said she refused to comply with an order by the bus driver to move to a rear seat because of "a doctor's order to avoid bumps and jars."

She said a white passenger then "grabbed me by the arms. He yanked me up, banged my head against a metal bar in a seat in front of me, twisted my right arm behind my back and then threw me into a rear seat."

The suit was filed in the State Supreme Court here against the Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines. The New York Supreme Court is a trial court and not the highest court in the state.

Robert Lee, assistant manager of Southeastern Greyhound Lines in Atlanta, said the case has not been brought to his attention. He said it probably would fall under the jurisdiction of Roy F. Robinson, manager of the district where the woman was allegedly assaulted.

Urban League Wants Airlines To Drop Bias Against Negroes

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Sun. 2-5-56

NEW YORK — The Urban League of Greater New York (Thursday, February 2) called upon the New York State Commission Against Discrimination to put into effect a never-beforeused section of the state's ani-bias law in order to curb alleged discrimination against Negroes by airlines operating in New York State.

The League asked for the creation of a statewide citizens' advisory agency or conciliation council to investigate the airlines' alleged refusal to hire qualified Negroes in flight positions, such as pilots, flight engineer, steward or stewardess.

If the Commission acts favorably on the League's application, it will mark the first time that the Commission agreed to set up machinery for an industry-wide investigation of discrimination. Previously, it had acted solely on complaints of individuals that they were discriminated against.

The League's application was presented personally this afternoon to Commission Chairman Charles Abrams by Mrs. Sophia Yarnell Jacobs, League president; Theodore W. Kheel, chairman of the League's Committee on Employment Opportunities for Negroes in the Airline Industry and impartial chairman of the city's private transit industry;

N.C. bus companies agree to wait-see on integration order

Greensboro Daily News

RALEIGH, N.C. — The four major bus lines operating in interstate commerce in North Carolina held an informal meeting with representatives of the State Utilities Commission last week to determine their action on the ICC's order that segregation on common carriers must be stopped.

The consensus of the meeting was that the interstate carriers would operate as usual and "wait and see" what happens.

The bus companies at the meeting were Greyhound, Seashore Transportation Co., Carolina Trailways and Southern Bus Co. Utility commissioners at the meeting were E. H. McMahan, Harry Westcott, Ralph Moody and Sam Worthington.

Once Busy Bus Industry Fighting a Losing Battle

News and Observer P. 18

By JIM CHANEY.

The bus transportation business is fighting a losing battle with the auditors.

Unless conditions change somehow in the next few years, many companies in North Carolina and over the nation will be forced to disband.

Many already have. Within the past two years at least a dozen bus lines holding State Utilities Commission certificates have failed. Others are failing.

The once busy and promising industry is the victim of the automobile and the housing development.

Raleigh

People who a generation ago would have ridden buses and trains now travel almost entirely by private auto. The railroads repeatedly have pointed this out in petitions for discontinuance of passenger schedules.

Mon. 10-1-56

The housing development is a symptom of a change in living.

People no longer live in compact collections of apartments and houses in fixed districts or along key streets and main roads. They are scattered for miles around their cities in surburbanite ranch houses and split-levels.

The bus companies which attempt to serve them must provide ever longer and more numerous routes. To do that, of course, means to increase costs usually without materially increasing revenues.

The trend toward decentralization has resulted, too, in scattered shopping centers, big office buildings and industries both within and outside city limits.

The end result is that a bus line serving a city like Raleigh must be prepared to move people between many widely separated areas. It's no longer enough to have buses ready to haul the going-to-work mob downtown in the morning and the going-home mob back to the residential districts in the afternoon.

The troubles plague both intercity and city operators. Practically every company with a North Carolina certificate, from the smallest to the nationally known, has cancelled routes, or reduced service within the past two years.

THINNER AND THINNER—The bus transportation business, "the victim of the automobile and the housing development," is fighting a losing battle due to thinner crowds at bus stops and increased costs entailed in longer and more numerous routes. (Photo by Ed Chabot).

Some have merged. The Norfolk Southern Bus Company is an example. It was absorbed about a year and a half ago by Carolina Coach. Others have died slowly, route by route.

The Utilities Commission, granting the intercity lines a recent increase in package and express rates, brought out that extra revenue must be found to keep buses moving.

Raising fares is not a solution. Nor is cutting schedules. Each is followed by a drop in patronage. Each drives more passengers to autos.

Raleigh's city bus operator, White Transportation Company, has been "in the red" to the point that the expression has ceased to be amusing.

Winston-Salem's operator, Winston-Salem City Bus Lines, Inc., which took over from Duke Power Company last year, already is fighting to discontinue night and Sunday service.

Murphy - Franklin Bus Line of Shooting Creek gav eup the ghost in March, 1955, Burke Transportation Company of Morganton the following June. (Morganton now is served by Suburban Coach Coach Company Inc.)

Last January, as the deadline fell for purchasing new licenses, five companies collapsed—Henderson, City Transit Company of Elkin, Ricks Bus Line of Greenville, Saxapahaw-Burlington Coach Company of Graham, and Beatty Ford Bus Company Inc. of Charlotte. Most had ceased service earlier.

Montsford Cove Bus Line of Marion cancelled its certificate March 27 and William H. Large of Hot Springs this May 8.

Last month, two more fell — Central Bus Company of Lincolnton and Brevard Bus Company of Brevard.

The ranks are thinning. National reports say many lines in the big cities are tottering. The bus is headed the way of the trolley.

The bus line official and stockholder are only two of the sufferers.

For all the automobiles, hundreds of people in Raleigh, thousands in North Carolina and millions in the nation still depend on the buses to get where they must go.

When the buses go, how will they travel?

Appeals Court Orders Three Judge Court For Bus Case

World Fri 9-7-56 P. 1

Birm. Ala

(Special to Memphis World)

CINCINNATI, Ohio — (SNS) — Chief Judge Charles C. Simons of the District Court of Appeals here Tuesday issued an order establishing a three judge court to hear the bus segregation case filed in Memphis by Negro postal employee O. Z. Evers earlier this year.

The request for a three Judge court was corporated in the civil action suit filed by Evers on Tuesday, June 5, asking that all Tennessee codes requiring segregation of passengers on public transit vehicles be declared null and void" and in violation of the 14th amendment.

The suit was filed by Evers following an incident which occurred April 26.

On April 26, Evers in the company of his next door neighbor, G. L. Myers of 675 Lipford, boarded a No. 7 "Crosstown" Memphis Street Railway trolley (number 1011) and together took a seat near the front.

The bus driver, identified as Warren G. Alexander, asked the two Negroes to move to the back pointing out that "the law" required Negro and white passengers to be separated.

After the two men refused to move the driver stopped at the fire station on Bellevue near Walker where he apparently called the police.

Shortly after two policemen boarded the trolley and gave Evers and Myers, both postal employees, the option of moving to the rear or leaving the bus. The duo chose to leave the bus.

The suit filed by Evers thru Atty. H. T. Lockard, president of the Memphis NAACP, asked that (1) a three judge court be set up to hear the case, (2) that a temporary injunction be issued restraining the defendants from enforcing sections 1704 thru 1708 of Title 65 of the Tennessee Codes which require transit segregation and (3) that a final judgment be rendered declaring the cited sections as "unconstitutional and therefore null and void in that they deny due process of law and equal protection of the law" under the 14th amendment and Title 42 of the United States Code.

Commissioner of Public Service John T. (Buddy) Dwyer, the three other city commissioners, Mayor Edmund Orgill, Police Chief J. C. Macdonald, the two policemen, the bus driver and the Memphis Street Railway Co. are named as defendants.

No date for the trial has been set.

Circuit Court Judge John D. Martin and District Court Judges Marion Boyd of West Tennessee and William E. Miller of Middle Tennessee were named to the court.

Assisting Atty. Lockard in presenting Evers' case will be Robert Carter and Thurgood Marshall of the national NAACP legal staff.

Justices Rule On Buses in S. Carolina

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Tue. 4-24-56

By LUTHER A. HUSTON

(Copyright 1956 by The New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON, April 23—The Supreme Court ruled today against the last vestige of racial segregation in public transportation.

The court's action left standing a ruling by a federal Court of Appeals that segregation in intrastate buses violates the U.S. Constitution. It knocked out a South Carolina law making segregation of passengers on motor vehicles mandatory.

DIXIE IMPACT

Since 12 other states have similar laws the ruling was regarded as having wide application throughout the South. Its impact upon local laws and customs was regarded as scarcely less solid than the high court's decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

One interpretation of today's action was that it legally embalmed the doctrine of Plessy vs. Ferguson. That was the case, decided in 1896, in which the Supreme Court said segregation of passengers on railroads was constitutional if "separate but equal" facilities were provided.

SCHOOL CASE

In its school segregation ruling, the high court said the "separate but equal" doctrine had no place in the field of public education. The Court of Appeals, in the South Carolina bus case, said Plessy vs. Ferguson was no longer applicable law in the transportation field.

In effect, the Supreme Court rebuked the South Carolina Electric & Gas Co. for bringing the appeal. This company operates the bus system in Columbia, S. C.

The court's opinion said simply that "the appeal is dismissed" and cited Slaker vs. O'Connor. That was a decision in which the court dismissed an appeal as "without any authority of law" that "needlessly consumed our time."

WOMAN SUES

The case before the high court grew out of a suit for damages brought against the bus company by Sarah Mae Flemming, a Negro. She asked $25,000 because a driver had forced her to leave a bus when she refused to move to that part of the bus reserved for Negroes.

Lawyers for Miss Flemming charged that the South Carolina statute requiring segregation on buses was unconstitutional. They alleged that enforcement of the law abridged her civil rights as guaranteed by the 14th Amendment.

Constitution

This was the position upheld by the Court of Appeals July 1, 1955, and from which the bus company appealed to the high court.

Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia have laws similar to the South Carolina statute. The validity of all these laws was believed impaired by the high court's ruling, although court practices would be to decide cases brought under them in the light of particular circumstances.

Today's decision by the Supreme Court was the first involving segregation on buses operating within the boundaries of a state. In 1946 it held that segregation of passengers by race on buses crossing state lines was an unconstitutional burden on interstate commerce.

The Supreme Court now has outlawed segregation in schools, public works and recreation areas, golf courses supported by public funds and, in the District of Columbia, in theaters, hotels and restaurants.

The Flemming damage suit originally was dismissed by a federal District Court on the ground that the "separate but equal" doctrine as applied to transportation had not been set aside by the Supreme Court's school decision.

Chief Judge John J. Parker of the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit reversed that decision.

Atlanta Ga.

Presumably the damage suit will now go back to the District Court for trial.

In its appeal brief to the Supreme Court, the bus company said public necessity required that the state's police power to enforce segregation be maintained for the present. The city of Columbia, in a separate brief, asked the court to let stand the separate but equal doctrine in the interest of "peace, harmony and the general welfare."

These positions were supported by the State of South Carolina In a brief filed by Atty. Gen. T. C. Callison, the state asserted that conditions could not be improved "by having courts strike down statutory law" that guaranteed "to everyone his constitutional rights in the pursuit of happiness on a voluntary basis." Callison said racial progress in the state had been "nullified by agitators."

COURT'S BUS RULING DISPUTED IN SOUTH

Times Atlanta New York

COLUMBIA, S. C., May 10 (AP)—The South Carolina Public Service Commission said today the United States Supreme Court had not ruled on intrastate travel segregation laws.

It said South Carolina laws requiring white and Negro passengers to ride separately on trains and buses within the state were "in full force and effect" despite a recent action of the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court refused April 23 to review a case from Columbia in which a Negro woman, Sara Mae Flemming, sued the city bus operators for $25,000 because a driver had insisted she sit apart from white passengers.

M. 5-11-56

The court's refusal has been interpreted as upholding a ruling by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals that bus segregation was unconstitutional. The Public Service Commission disagreed with this interpretation.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 10 (AP)—A three-judge Federal panel will convene tomorrow to hear a suit by four Negroes challenging the racial barriers responsible for a mass boycott of city buses in Montgomery.

The suit seeks an injunction to stop city and state officials from enforcing the laws against mixing of races and a declaratory judgment holding the statutes unconstitutional.

The action of the three-judge panel can be appealed directly to the Supreme Court, while the South Carolina case concerned in the April 23 decision must go back to a lower court for trial. Thus the trial here may produce the first clear-cut finding by the Supreme Court.

PSC Denies Court Killed Bus Segregation in S.C.

Constitution Fri. 5-11-56 Atlanta Ga. P. 13

COLUMBIA, S.C., May 10 (AP)—The South Carolina Public Service Commission said today the U.S. Supreme Court has not ruled on intrastate travel segregation laws—and explained why it thinks so.

It said South Carolina laws requiring white and Negro passengers to ride separately on trains and buses within the state "are in full force and effect" despite Supreme Court refusal April 23 to review a case from Columbia in which a Negro woman, Sara Mae Flemming, sued the city bus operators for $25,000 because a driver insisted she sit apart from white passengers.

The court's refusal to review has been widely interpreted as upholding a 4th Circuit Court of Appeals ruling in the case that bus segregation is unconstitutional. Some government lawyers disagreed.

In its ruling the Circuit Court contradicted a District Court decision by Judge George Bell Timman Sr.—father of South Carolina's governor—that segregation was not a valid cause of action.

The Public Service Commission said the sole reason the Supreme Court refused to review the case was not because of the segregation issue, but because it just will not consider any case until a District Court has rendered a final judgment.

The Supreme Court's only reference in the dismissal was to Slaker vs. O'Connor, a case in which the commission said the court declared it would not review a case until after final trial judgment.

Thus, the PSC said, the high court actually has not ruled one way or the other on bus segregation—a view taken by a number of lawyers, including State Atty. Gen. T. C. Callison.

Our Opinions

Defender P. 9

Constitutional Confusion

Sat 5-5-56

The Supreme Court's action — or the lack of it —on the Sarah Flemming suit against the Carolina Coach co., last week has left some sharply differing opinions among legal experts.

Specifically, the high court dismissed the appeal of the utilities company from a lower court decision instructing the state of South Carolina to cease segregation on public conveyances. At first glance, this seemed like a clear cut interpretation which could be broadly applied to all intrastate travel and some newspapers came out with headlines proclaiming the end of the Montgomery bus boycott.

Chicago, Ill.

In fact, the National City Lines which own the Montgomery system sent out an order telling the local management to end discrimination in its policy. But the mayor and the chief of police and the public utilities commissioner have threatened to arrest any driver or passenger who attempts to carry out the order of integration and the bus protest by 50,000 Negroes goes on.

In Virginia, three cities, Norfolk, Richmond and Portsmouth, ended segregation on buses, but the lawyers are arguing. In Washington, Father Joseph Snee of the Georgetown university Law School, said the appeal was dismissed on the technical ground that a final decision on the case had not been reached by the lower courts. He said the ruling in itself did not consider the question of segregation, and he predicted that the case can come up before the Supreme Court again.

Other lawyers have interpreted the decision as not settling the issue, but serving as a guide for further procedures. They disagree over the question of whether the last vestiges of the Plessy vs Ferguson separate but equal doctrine have been knocked out.

NAACP lawyers said the ruling had no bearing on the conviction of Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., on a conspiracy charge; but it might be applied in the case of Mrs. Rosa Parks convicted of violating the state statute on segregation in travel.

On May 11, the suit of Mrs. Parks and four other members of the Montgomery Improvement Association testing the state law on intrastate travel will be heard in a three-member Federal District court.

So, there seems to be a lot of constitutional confusion. In our opinion, the high court was proceeding along proper legal lines in the same framework of the decisions in the Schools cases. Now that the bus company in Chicago has formally ordered the end to segregation in Montgomery, the city fathers are committing financial harakiri when they block the order; because the Negroes are still remaining off the buses and the deficit is piling up higher and higher. The walls are crumbling, but some diehards would rather be silly than right.

It is encouraging that in some parts of the South, sanity is prevailing.

New Trial May Clarify Court Action On Buses

Defender p. 1 Sat. 5-26-56 Chicago, Ill.

COLUMBIA, S. C. — (INS) — Federal district court at Columbia, S. C., apparently is going to have to decide, probably starting next month, whether racial segregation on intrastate buses is legal.

The district court is expected to schedule for its June term a hearing of the now-famous case of Sarah Mae Flemming, versus the South Carolina Electric and Gas co., a public bus operator.

The U.S. Supreme Court on April 23rd dismissed an appeal in the case. The action immediately was interpreted as outlawing segregation on buses operated inside states.

Some southern bus companies even painted out "white" and "colored" signs. Then lawyers, judges and public service commissioners said the high court actually rendered no decision on bus segregation.

SUED FOR $25,000

Miss Flemming had sued the company for $25,000. She had been removed from a bus for refusing to move out of an area reserved for white passengers.

She asked damages because, she claimed, the Supreme Court's 1954 decision, declaring segregation in public schools unconstitutional also applied to intrastate buses.

But Federal District Judge George Bell Timmerman threw the suit out before judging on the damage claim itself. He said Miss Flemming had no case because South Carolina's law requiring segregation on intrastate buses was constitutional.

Thus she had been removed from a bus for violating a constitutional law, all of which was perfectly proper.

DECISION REVERSED

The federal court of appeals reversed that decision. It said the Supreme Court's historic 1954 school anti-segregation decision applied. The appelate court sent the case back to the district court for further proceedings.

Then the bus company appealed this decision to the U.S. Supreme Court.

On April 23, the high court dismissed the bus company's appeal, citing Slacker vs. O'Conner.

That litigation established the precedent a final judgement had to be entered before an appeal could be taken to the Supreme Court. But the suit of Sarah Mae Flemming for damages still had not been decided by the district court.

THREE VIEWS

Attorney took three general views of the Supreme Court dismissal: 1) Philip Wittenberg, Miss Flemming's attorney, claimed the court's action in effect sustained the appellate court position that segregation on intrastate buses is illegal.

"When the Supreme Court dismissed the case," he said, "it left the appellate court ruling in effect, and therefore my client has a legitimate case on the grounds that her civil rights were violated."

2) Frank Gray, attorney for the company, said the doctrine of "separate but equal" facilities for Negroes and white, overthrown in the public schools case, "is still controlling (for buses) until, and unless it is specifically overthrown by the Supreme Court."

"The district court's decision, he said, was correct and the plaintiff "has no case."

3) South Carolina Atty. General T. C. Collison took a different tack. He said since the Supreme Court returned the case to the district court, it threw out the decision of he appeals court.

Since there had been no final disposition of the case in district court, he contended, the state's racial segregation laws were not not affected "one way or the other."

SEE NO CHANGE

The South Carolina Public Service commission said: "The Supreme Court's action . . . merely means that the case is not yet ripe for its decision.

Therefore, its action in dismissing the appeal has no effect on the validity or enforcibility of the laws of this state dealing with segregation of passengers on intrastate buses or intrastate railroads."

Two of three circuit court judges hearing a suit in Montgomery, Ala., where Negroes have long been boycotting segregated buses, commented similarly in remarks the bench.

They did not consider the Supreme Court had ruled one way or another on segregation on intrastate buses.

The South Carolina Gas and Electric co. had until Saturday to file a petition for a rehearing on its dismissed appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Now the case is scheduled to come up at the June term of the federal district court at Columbia for a final judgement on the merits of Miss Flemming's suit for damages.

Woman Given Another Chance In Carolina Bus Case Appeal

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 30 (AP) — A Columbia S.C., Negro woman was given a third chance today to seek $25,000 in a damage suit against a city bus company in her home town.

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals for the second time ordered her case back to District Judge George Bell Timmerman of Columbia for trial.

Mrs. Sarah Mae Fleming Brown contended a driver ordered her off a city bus for sitting in front of white people, and hit her with his elbow when she was getting off. South Carolina law says the races must be segregated, but does not specify seating positions. By custom, Negroes sit in the rear of buses.

The South Carolina Electric and Gas Co., operating the buses, insisted that the driver was only directing her to get off by the rear entrance, where both white and Negro passengers alight. Bus regulations reserve the front entrance for incoming passengers, white and Negro.

Sat. 12-1-56

She sued on the grounds her civil rights were violated by segregation on the bus.

The first time it came before him, Timmerman said she had no Federal court case. The second time, he said a state law requiring racial segregation on buses was valid at the time—1954. Such laws recently were declared unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The appeals court held that whether a law was valid at the time "may properly be considered by the jury on the issue of damages."

In his second ruling, Timmerman noted that there was nothing to show the driver was acting under the state segregation law, but that if he was, he was acting under a law valid then.

The appeals court said that in most decisions, reliance on a law later declared unconstitutional does not protect a person from being liable.

Students Continue Tests of Bus JC

Afro-American Sat. 12-15-56 P. 12

Baltimore Md.

COLUMBIA, S.C. — College students who have been sampling effectiveness of state and city bus segregation laws for a week, reported Friday "no incidents" after numerous "try-outs."

Independent of the college itself, and of the campus NAACP chapter, numerous students at Allen University began tests of the city's bus seating Thursday of last week.

Three buses, at three different times, were used Thursday; two other routes were made Monday and Tuesday, with further tests scheduled the remainder of the week.

Fred Moore, campus NAACP president, told The AFRO:

"We are happy to say that there were no incidents. We consider that our experiment has succeeded. The only thing we hope now is that more people will get on the buses and take the first seats they come to."

Students reported incidents, however, wherein two bus drivers and a city police officer had refused interference with the racially mixed seating of passengers.

* * *

ON FRIDAY, a driver asked a student to leave the front seat he had taken next to a white woman passenger. The student refused; the driver returned to his seat and started his run.

The woman passenger did not protest or change seats.

The next afternoon students noted that when they boarded a bus, one of the three used Thursday, a city police patrol car with two officers trailed the bus uptown. A third officer sat among passengers, but said nothing as the seats were taken.

One white passenger asked the officer to order a student to a rear seat. He was told, student leaders said, "There is nothing I can do about it."

He emphasized the "I" and later surrendered his own seat near the front to a young colored woman passenger who had gotten on.

* * *

A SECOND BUS DRIVER, Mr. Moore reported, told one male student he could be arrested for refusing to move. However, the driver made no further attempt to remove the young man, and drove on his route.

One other student reported Tuesday that he had observed a white male passenger "elbowing and nudging" a woman student who had seated herself beside him.

Seeing that the young woman was irritated, the student said:

"I told her not to move, not to hunch him back. I told her just take it."

She did and was along with the next group of students continuing the experiment.

Things did not go so well for the students on the campus, however.

The two advisors of the campus NAACP chapter, H. E. Chariton and R. E. Moran, resigned immediately after the first tests were made.

Mr. Moore said one of these told him he had not understood that students in the branch would do more than "study" conditions.

Some faculty members thought the testings pre-mature and said they thought "outsiders" were misuing and exploiting the students.

They refused to say who the "outsiders" were, or might be. However, James M. Hinton, state NAACP president, told the AFRO from his office in Augusta, Ga., that the first he knew of the student efforts was Local NAACP leaders said when they were in their second try.

they were not consulted by the student chapter, and therefore didn't know beforehand about the undertaking.

Mr. Hinton, who conferred with Mr. Moore and other student leaders, privately, on the weekend, said that so long as they employ orderly procedures, they will have full NAACP backing, where and if they need it.

Mr. Moore told the AFRO that he had been told by faculty spokesmen that the effort cannot be undertaken in the name of the college, unless first endorsed by the trustees and administrative officers.

S.C. bus case may hold key to mixing intrastate travel

Afro-American Sat. 2-11-56 P.3

Baltimore, Md.

By JOHN H. McCRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C. — While the ICC ruling, effective Jan. 12, put a big dent in segregation in transportation, legal sources here said this week that the pending Sarah Flemming suit may provide the key to a final settling of the issue.

The U.S. Supreme Court has yet to act on an appeal from the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals which, last July, held that the S.C. Electric and Gas Co., operators of city buses in Columbia, could not segregate Miss Flemming and other colored passengers.

They based their opinion on the May 31 school case ruling of the Supreme Court.

SPECIFICALLY, the Circuit Court remanded to the U.S. District Court at Columbia the Flemming case, reversing Judge George Bell Timmerman Sr., who dismissed Miss Flemming's complaint and suit for $25,000 damages with the rejoinder:

"One's personality and education is not developed on a city bus."

Timmerman held that the May 31 school ruling was not applicable to the transportation case.

MISS FLEMMING filed suit after a city bus driver refused to let her leave the crowded bus by way of the front door. He allegedly struck her in the stomach during the refusal.

Legal observers said this week that the Flemming case is being watched as the "next phase" of segregation in transportation.

MEANWHILE RAILROAD companies maintain a "wait and see" position.

Lawyers reason that since the Flemming case attacks intrastate travel segregation, should the Supreme Court uphold the Circuit Court's ruling, this would end legally the issue which was the basis for the Plessy vs. Ferguson decision of 1896.

* * *

NAACP SOURCES (the NAACP entered the case on appeal to the Circuit Court) said the Supreme Court might pursue one of two actions in disposing of the pending appeal:

1. It might order hearings, with arguments on the issue being scheduled.

2. Or, it might refuse to accept the appeal, in which case the matter would be settled, legally, though further litigation might arise in similar cases.

The possibility that the Supreme Court will reverse the Circuit Court is considered "unlikely."

Meanwhile, lawyers for both sides await momentarily indication of the high court's intention in the matter.

Legislator attacks action in dropping case against Negro

News & Leader Thurs. 3-1-56

COLUMBIA, S. C., March 1—(AP)—A state representative has criticized Florence authorities for what he termed "the jellyfish manner in which they handled Clarence Mitchell's flagrant violation of South Carolina segregation customs."

Rep. John Calhoun Hart of Union, an outspoken segregationist, referred to the nol prossing of a case brought against Mitchell, head of the Washington office of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, because he used a white railroad waiting room.

THE FBI ENTERED the case yesterday on orders of the Justice Department to determine whether federal civil rights laws were violated.

Mitchell and the Rev. Horace P. Sharper of Sumter were charged with failing to obey a police officer in the discharge of his duties. The charges were not prosecuted at the request of Florence's city attorney.

Hart said that Florence can expect NAACP members to imitate Mitchell on a wholesale scale as a result of the action.

"We must have a showdown sooner or later," Hart declared, "and it s doubtlful that a better opportunity will ever present itself."

Hart has introduced several bills to curb NAACP activities in South Carolina.

POLICE ARREST NEGRO LEADER AT RAIL DEPOT

Daily Tribune Wed. 2-29-56

Chicago, Ill.

Refused to Go Out and Come In Again

P. 6

Florence, S. C., Feb. 28 (AP)—Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington bureau of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was arrested here last night at a railroad station.

Mitchell said he had refused to use an entrance provided for Negroes.

A hearing of the case was scheduled later today in Recorders court, Mitchell said police informed him.

Stopped by Policeman

Mitchell said that he and the Rev. Horace P. Sharper, pastor of the First Baptist [Negro] church of Sumter, entered the Atlantic Coast Line railroad station at about 11:30 last night to check on a ticket reservation.

A policeman stopped him and told him either to come back into the station thru the colored entrance or leave. Mitchell asserted he was an interstate passenger and would not use the colored entrance. Both he and his companion were arrested.

At the police station, Mitchell posted $17 bond. The same amount was set for Sharper, whom police held in a cell for about a half hour until bond was obtained.

Charged with Resisting

At the office here of his attorney, William W. Bennett, Mitchell said: "We had to call three times to the police station today before we learned what the charge was against us."

Mitchell said he and Sharper were charged with resisting an officer in performance of his duty, altho, he added, police said if Mitchell had not refused to use the colored entrance nothing would have happened.

Florence police said the only officer authorized to comment on the matter was Capt. Herbert Fields. He could not be reached immediately.

FBI to Probe Negro's Arrest

News & Observer Thurs. 3-1-56

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29 (AP)—The FBI was told by the Justice Department today to "get the facts" about the arrest of Clarence Mitchell, Washington Negro, at the railroad station in Florence, S.C., Monday night.

Raleigh, N.C.

The FBI's investigation is to determine whether federal civil rights laws were violated. P. 12

Mitchell and the Rev. Horace P. Sharper, Sumter, S.C., Negro minister, reported they were taken into custody when they refused to use an entrance for Negroes at the station. Mitchell, who is director of the Washington office of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored Poeple, said he and Sharper had gone to the station to check on train reservations.

Both were charged with failing to obey a police officer in the discharge of his duties. The charges were nol prossed (not prosecuted) when the cases were called for hearing yesterday at Florence. The nol prosses were taken at the request of the city attorney.

Following their arrests, the two men had been freed on bond.

Court Will Not Clarify Bus Ruling for Press

Post New York, N.Y. 3-8-56

Washington, April 26 (AP)—Banning E. Whittington, Supreme Court press information officer, said today, "There is no comment as far as any clarification from the Court is concerned" on the South Carolina bus case.

Whittington gave this reply to a written request for comment to clarify last Monday's brief order by the high tribunal.

The court order, by simply dismissing an appeal, left standing a Circuit Court decision that South Carolina's law requiring race segregation on buses is unconstitutional and that the U. S. District Court at Columbia, S. C., should proceed to try the suit of a Negro woman seeking damages for enforcement of the law.

[Legal experts told The Post yesterday that the court order did not actually outlaw segregation on intrastate buses. Instead of saying that such segregation was unconstitutional, the Supreme Court merely said it would not hear the case until a lower court had issued a final order.]

Whittington said the only way clarification might come from the Court would be as the result of a request by the parties involved in the case. No such request has been filed.

Federal Court May Have To Soon Decide Bus Question

Sat. 5-19-56 Atlanta, Ga. P. 1

COLUMBIA, S. C. — (INS) — Federal District Court at Columbia, S. C., apparently is going to have to decide, probably starting next month, whether racial segregation on intrastate buses is legal.

The District Court is expected to schedule for its June term a hearing of the non-famous case of Miss Sarah Mae Flemming, a Negro, versus the South Carolina Electric and Gas Co., a public bus operator

The U S. Supreme Court on April 23 dismissed an appeal in the case. The action immediately was interpreted as outlawing segregation on buses operated inside states.

SOME COMPLIED

Some Southern Bus Companies even painted out "white" and "colored" signs Then lawyers, Judges and public service commissioners said the high court actually rendered no decision on bus segregation.

Miss Flemming had sued the Company for $25,000 She had been removed from a bus for refusing to move out of an area reserved for white passengers She asked damages because, she claimed, the Supreme Court's 1954 decision, declaring segregation in public schools unconstitutional also applied to intrastate buses.

But Federal District Judge George Bell Timmerman threw the suit out beofre judging on the damage claim itself. He said Miss Flemming had no case because South Carolina's law requiring segregation on intrastate buses was constitutional Thus she had been removed from a bus for violating a constitutional law all of which was perfectly proper.

REVISED DECISION

The Federal Court of Appeals reversed that decision. It said the Supreme Court's historic 1954 school anti-segregation decision applied. The Appellate Court sent the case back to the District Court for further proceedings.

Then the Bus Company appealed this decision to the U. S. Supreme Court. On April 23 the high court dismissed the bus company's appeal, citing Slacker vs O'Conner That litigation established the precedent a final judgment had to be entered before an appeal could be taken to the Supreme Court But the suit of Miss Sarah Mae Flemming for damages still had not been decided by the District Court.

Daily World P. 5

Attorneys took three general views of the Supreme Court dismissal:

1—Philip Whittenberg, Miss Flemming's Attorney, claimed the courts action in effect sustained the appelate court position that segregation on intrastate buses is illegal.

CASE DISMISSED

"When the Supreme Court dismissed the case," he said, "it left the appelate court ruling in effect and therefore, my client has a legitimate case on the grounds that her civil rights were violated."

2—Frank Gray, Attorney for the company, said the doctrine of "separate but equal" facilities for Negroes and white, overthrow in the public schools case, "is still controlling (for buses) until, and unless it is specifically overturned by the Supreme Court." The District Court's decision ,he said, was correct and the plaintiff "has no case."

DIFFERENT TACK

3—South Carolina Attorney General T C. Callison took a different tack. He said that since the Supreme Court returned the case to the District Court, it threw out the decision of the Appeals Court Since there had been no final disposition of the case in District Court, he contended, the State's racial segregation laws were not affected "one way or the other."

The South Carolina Public Service Commission said: "The Supreme Court's action—merely means that the case is not yet ripe for its decision. Therefore, its action in dismissing the appeal has no effect on the validity or enforcibility of the laws of this state dealing with the segregation of passengers on intrastate buses or intrastate railroads."

THREE JUDGES

Two of three circuit court judges hearing a suit in Montgomery, Ala., where Negroes have long been boycotting segregated buses, commented similarly in remarks from the bench. Thy did not consider the Supreme Court had ruled one way or another on segregation on intrastate buses"

The South Carolina Gas and Electric Co., had until today to file a petition for a rehearing on its dismissed appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court

Now the case is scheduled to come up at the June term of the Federal District Court at Columbia for a final judgment on the merits of Miss Flemming's suit for damages.

DESPITE COURT ACTION

Carolina PSC Declares Race Barriers Still Up

Fri. 5-11-56

Montgomery, Ala.

COLUMBIA, S. C., May 10 (AP)—The South Carolina Public Service Commission said today the U.S. Supreme Court has not ruled on intrastate travel segregation laws —and explained why it thinks so.

It said South Carolina laws requiring white and Negro passengers to ride separately on trains and buses within the state "are in full force and effect" despite Supreme Court refusal April 23 to review a case from Columbia in which a Negro woman, Sara Mae Flemming, sued the city bus operators for $25,000 because a driver insisted she sit apart from white passengers.

The court's refusal to review has been widely interpreted as upholding a 4th Circuit Court of Appeals ruling in the case that bus segregation is unconstitutional. Some government lawyers disagreed.

In its ruling the Circuit Court contradicted a District Court decision by Judge George Bell Timman, Sr.—father of South Carolina's governor—that, segregation was not a valid cause of action.

The Public Service Commission said the sole reason the Supreme Court refused to reiew the case was not because of the segregation issue, but because it just will not consider any case until a District Court has rendered a final judgment.

The Supreme Court's only reference in the dismissal was to Slaker vs. O'Connor, a case in which the commission said the court declared it would not review a case until after final trial judgment.

Thus, the PSC said, the high court actually has not ruled one way or the other on bus segregation—a view taken by a number of lawyers, including State Atty. Gen. T. C. Callison.

The Flemming suit is currently on file in the Federal Dist. Court here and will be tried before Judge Timmerman at a future date as yet not specified.

Timmerman again dismisses matron's S.C. bus damage suit

Afro-American Sat. 6-23-56 P3

Baltimore, Md.

COLUMBIA, S.C. — U.S. District Court Judge George Bell Timmerman Sr., in a surprise action, again dismissed the $25,000 civil rights damage suit of Mrs. Sarah Mae Flemming Brown against the South Carolina Electric and Gas Co., Wednesday morning, after a day's hearing.

Judge Timmerman had, in 1955, dismissed the suit ruling that "one's education and personality is not developed on a city bus."

In July, 1955, however, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed him, holding that the 1954 Supreme Court school case rulings meant that the Plessy vs. Ferguson transportation suit precedent of 1896 no longer was law.

* * *

IT REMANDED the case to his court for settlement on the damages angle, the segregation issue being settled.

Philip Wittenberg, chief counsel for the 23-year-old Eastover, S.C., woman who sued after being struck in the stomach by a company bus driver on June 22, 1954, told the AFRO that he had ordered a copy of Timmerman's order.

If there were basis enough, he would again take the case before the Fourth Circuit Court, he said.

* * *

JUDGE TIMMERMAN'S ruling came as a surprise even to veteran court observers when Wednesday morning, he granted a defense motion to dismiss the action after having refused a similar request on Tuesday.

Mr. Timmerman, who occasionally took swipes at the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals in his latest ruling, contends that:

1. At the time of the incident provoking the suit the bus driver was operating under state law which clothed him with the power of a police officer.

2. That the plaintiff had failed to show that the driver had acted under statutes showing clearly he violated constitutional rights.

Mrs. Brown had rested her case about 4:30 p.m., Tuesday, after two other witnesses, Mrs. Julia Elizabeth King and Mrs. Mozelle Martin, had corroborated her testimony that she had taken an unoccupied seat on the bus and was hit in the stomach by the driver when she sought to leave by the front, rather than the rear door.

HER ATTORNEYS have 30 days in which to indicate an appeal from Timmerman's ruling.

One lawyer reasoned that while Judge Timmerman contended any ruling in favor of the plaintiff would mean a "retroactive" decision, "It has been my opinion that whenever a court finds a practice unlawful, the practice has always been unlawful and such a ruling, in itself, is retroactive."

Timmerman's opinion flailed the Fourth Circuit Court for, what he said, overstepping the U.S. Supreme Court in holding intrastate and other trasportation practices of segregation by race illegal.

He held the highest court hadn't yet decided this question as had the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Observers predicted that the case will very likely wend its way again to the Supreme Court which, last month, refused an appeal on it brought by the defendants.

S.C. bus suit being retried

Baltimore, Md.

COLUMBIA, S.C. — The two-pronged civil rights suit of the former Miss Sarah Mae Flemming, now Mrs. Sarah Mae Brown of Eastover, filed in 1954 against segregated seating on city busses of the S.C. Electic and Gas Company, was scheduled for a re-trial in U.S. District Court here on June 12.

Actually, Federal Judge Bell Timmerman Sr. will reconsider the case in the light of a U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals ruling in 1955.

It reversed Judge Bell's dismissal of the case and ordered him to reconsider the case in the light of the celebrated school cases, in which the Supreme Court outlawed racial segregation.

* * *

THE POWER company, aided by the state attorney general's office and the city of Columbia, appealed the Circuit Court's findings.

However, the Supreme Court rejected the appeal last month, leaving the Circuit Court's order standing.

After a power company's bus driver reportedly elbowed her on June 22, 1954, Miss Flemming sued for $25,000 damages and a declaratory judgment outlawing seating by race.

The June 12 hearing was selected to consider the damages claimed, as well as the Circuit Court's holding in the case.

Judge Timmerman, father of the state's governor, in dismissing the original suit, held:

"One's education and personality is not developed on a city bus."

LEGAL OBSERVERS here said the June 12 actions would most certainly begin anew a cycle of appeals and rulings which would reach the Supreme Court and, in the end, settle the issue of intrastate travel segregation.

No matter which side emerges victor following the hearing, these sources said, an appeal to the Circuit Court and subsequently to the Supreme Court "can be expected."

Bus Suit May Reach South Carolina Court

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. P.M. 6-8-56

COLUMBIA, S. C. (ANP) — The South Carolina bus segregation suit which the U S. Supreme Court refused to review may come up in a term of federal district court here opening June 12.

The suit was filed by Sarah Mae Fleming, 26-year-old Negro woman, against the South Carolina Electric and Gas Company for $25,000 after she was put off a city bus for refusing to move to a rear seat as is required by state law.

The U S Supreme Court sent the case back for trial on the facts after Judge George Bell Timmerman declared the woman had no case on the basis of the U. S. Supreme Court's ruling that racial segregation in schools is unconstitutional

"One's education is not obtained or furthered on a city bus," Judge Timmerman declared. The judge is the father of South Carolina's governor, George Bell Timmerman Jr., one of the south's leading pro-segregationists.

The U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the judge and declared the school ruling did apply.

The Supreme Court refused to hear an appeal from this decision citing only a case in which it had ruled that it would not hear any case until after a full trial on its merit in the lower courts.

Law Experts Say Decision Sets Course for a Ban on Intrastate Travel Bias

By LUTHER A. HUSTON

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 24 — Lawyers were reviewing today the legal background of the Supreme Court's action in a South Carolina bus case. They came up with answers that were not apparent when the ruling was announced yesterday.

The result was to circumscribe, as far as the legal aspects were concerned, the immediate impact of the decision. Few doubted, however, that the long-range effect would be — as appraised when the court's terse order was announced—to demolish the last bulwark of racial segregation in the field of public transportation.

The high court dismissed an appeal by the South Carolina Electric and Gas Company from a lower court ruling in a suit for damages brought by Sarah Mae Flemming.

The plaintiff, a Negro, had been removed from a bus for refusing to move from an area assigned to white passengers. The company operates the public bus transportation system in Columbia, S. C.

No explanation of its order was given by the court, except to cite a previous ruling in a 1929 case that did not involve segregation.

The order was widely interpreted as banning racial segregation on intrastate buses. Since separation of the races on trains and buses in interstate commerce already had been outlawed, this latest court action was seen as the fall of a final bastion.

Lawyers familiar with technical procedures in such cases said today, however, that this inter-

S. C. Denies Court Ruled on Bias

Inquirer Philadelphia

COLUMBIA, S. C., May 10 (AP). —The South Carolina Public Service Commission said today the U. S. Supreme Court had not ruled on intrastate travel segregation laws and explained why it thought so.

It said South Carolina laws requiring white and Negro passengers to ride separately on trains and buses within the State "are in full force and effect" despite a recent action of the U. S. Supreme Court.

ACTION INTERPRETED

The Supreme Court refused April 23 to review a case from Columbia in which a Negro woman, Sara Mae Flemming, sued the city bus operators for $25,000 because a driver insisted she sit apart from white passengers.

The court's refusal to review has been interpreted widely as upholding a 4th Circuit Court of Appeals ruling in the case that bus segregation is unconstitutional. Some Government lawyers disagreed.

In its ruling the Court of Appeals contradicted a District Court decision by Judge George Bell Timmerman, Sr.,—father of South Carolina's Governor—that segregation was not a valid cause of action.

EXPLANATION OFFERED

The Public Service Commission said the sole reason the Supreme Court refused to review the case was not because of the segregation issue, but because it would not consider any case until a District Court had rendered a final judgment.

The Supreme Court's only reference in the dismissal was to Slaker vs. O'Connor, a case in which the commission said the court declared it would not review a case until after final trial judgment.

Thus, the commission said, the Supreme Court actually has not ruled one way or the other on bus segregation—a view taken by a number of lawyers, including State Attorney General T. C. Callison.

pretation went too far. They argued that the ruling did not settle the issues, but simply prescribed further procedures.

The basis of the order, a study of the case history indicated, was that an appeal could not be brought to the high court until there had been a final judgment in the lower Federal courts. After the case has gone through the subordinate courts an appeal to the supreme tribunal for a ruling on the issues presumably would be acceptable.

When the Flemming suit was filed in Federal District Court it was heard by Judge George Bell Timmerman. The suit charged that South Carolina's law requiring racial segregation on motor vehicle carriers violated Federal rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution.

Judge Timmerman ruled, however, that the South Carolina statute was Constitutional.

In the challenge of the constitutionality of the law, the chief assertion had been that the Supreme Court's ruling, on May 17, 1954, that the "separate but equal" doctrine had no place in public education also ruled out the doctrine in public transportation.

In 1896 the Supreme Court had ruled, in Plessy vs. Ferguson, that separation of the races on railway trains did not infringe constitutional rights if equal accommodations were provided.

Judge Timmerman said, however, that to hold that the Supreme Court's decision in the school cases washed out the Plessy vs. Ferguson ruling "would be an unwarranted enlargement of the doctrine" announced in the school cases and "an unreasonable restriction on the police power of the state."

The Federal Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit reversed Judge Timmerman. It said:

"We do not think that the separate but equal doctrine of Plessy vs. Ferguson can any longer be regarded as a correct statement of the law * * *. The recent decisions * * * which relate to public schools leave no doubt that the separate but equal doctrine approved in Plessy vs. Ferguson has been repudiated."

The appellate body also ruled that the district judge had jurisdiction to hear the case. Under the Civil Rights Act, the court said, district courts could try cases involving deprivation of any rights, "under color of any state law," secured by the Constitution or an act of Congress.

The drivers of buses in South Carolina are police officers authorized to arrest persons disturbing peace and order. This is a statutory provision. The bus company argued that it was not legally liable for actions of a policeman pursuant to a state law.

The Appeals Court said, however, that the driver-policeman was acting for the company in enforcing a statute the company was required by law to enforce.

On these grounds, the Appellate tribunal sent the case back to the district court for further proceedings. This was the ruling the bus company appealed to the Supreme Court.

In dismissing the appeal, the high court cited Slaker v. O'Connor, decided Jan. 2, 1929, in an opinion by the late Justice James Clark McReynolds. The case involved claims of heirs of John O'Connor to parts of his estate in Nebraska.

Jusctie McReynolds dismissed the appeal in the Slaker case on two grounds. One was that it was frivolous and "needlessly consumed our time" and that of other parties to the suits. Justice McReynolds found precedent in previous court decisions and imposed a penalty of $150 upon John Slaker, executor of the O'Connor estate, payable to the other litigants.

But Justice McReynolds said also that appeals to the high court from Appellate Court rulings could be brought only where final judgment had been entered. In the Slaker case, he held, no final judgment had been handed down.

This was the section of the Slaker case ruling, lawyers said, that governed the Supreme Court's dismissal ou the South Carolina appeal. No final judgment had been rendered there because the Appeals Court had sent the case back to the district court, where it still is to be tried on the issues.

Intrastate Bus Travel Halted In S. C. Edict

World P.1 Fri. 4-27-56 Birm, Ala.

By IRWIN SAFCHIK

WASHINGTON — (INS) — The Supreme Court Decree, Monday that Negroes and whites may not be segregated on Intrastate buses in South Carolina.

The High Tribunal in effect upheld an appeals court ruling that the state's bus segregation law is unconstitutional.

It did so by dismissing an appeal from the lower court decision brought by the South Carolina Electric and Gas Co., in a case involving Sarah Mae Flemming, a Negro.

PUT OFF BUS

The woman then brought a suit for $25,000 against the transportation utility. A Federal District Court dismissed the case but the appeals court later reversed its decision.

The Supreme Court had previously ruled that segregation in interstate transportation is unconstitutional, but Monday's decision involved travel within a single state as well.

NO REASON

The high tribunal gave no reason for its action but merely handed down an order dismissing the case brought by the electric and gas company.

P. 8

In other decisions, the court:

1. Held that two convicted armed robbers were denied their constitutional rights when the State of Illinois refused to buy them the stenographic transcript of their trial. The two, Judson Griffin and James Crenshaw, insisted they were too poor to buy the document and that they were discriminated against on account of poverty when the State did not foot the bill itself.

In a unanimous decision, the Court agreed with their argument and sent the case back to the Illinois Supreme Court for further action.

2. Agreed to review a District Court decision holding that the CIO United Auto Workers did not violate election laws by four campaign broadcasts paid for with union funds.

The Union was indicted for four Detroit broadcasts costing from $700 to $2,500 each advocating support of "certain candidates"--Sen. Pat McNamara (D) and several Congressional nominees in 1954.

3. Ruled that a Court of Appeals improperly set aside a decision by the Civil Aeronautics Board that North American Airlines is infringing on the trade name of American Airlines.

By a vote of 7 to 2, the High Tribunal sent the case back to the Appeals Court for further action.

Gov. Marvin Griffin made the following statement:

"The decision of the United States Supreme Court which outlaws segregation in intrastate passenger traffic handed down in the South Carolina case is in keeping with the Court's policy heretofore announced in such cases.

"It is another example of an overt usurpation of the liberties of the people. The Court's decision applies to intrastate transportation by common carriers.

We shall oppose this latest decision just as we are resisting the decision in the school segregation case by all possible legal means."

COLUMBIA, S. C., April 25 (AP).—A Columbia Negro woman whose suit led to Monday's Supreme Court ban against race segregation in public intrastate transportation says she'll never ride a bus again.

"It was the right thing to do," 23-year-old Sarah Mae Brown said yesterday in reference to the court decision. "I only hope it won't lead to trouble."

"As for myself," Mrs. Brown said, "I never rode a city bus since they put me off and I never will again. I'll either ride with my husband to work or walk."

Mrs. Brown said she hopes the ruling will spare other Negroes from "the embarrassment and pain I suffered."

Her $25,000 civil suit against South Carolina Electric & Gas Co., which operates city buses here, was filed, she said, after "some NAACP people came to see me."

Mrs. Brown charged her civil rights were violated through enforcement of a State law requiring segregated seating in intrastate buses.

United States District Judge George Bell Timmerman ruled against Mrs. Brown. He was reversed in a United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals decision, which was upheld by the Supreme Court.

Mrs. Brown said in her suit she was elbowed by a bus driver after she sat down in the white section of the vehicle during a ride last year.

"I only sat down where I did because there was no room in the back," she said. "The driver told me to get up. I didn't say anything and he hit me in the stomach with his elbow as I got ready to get off."

Legal observers said that the PSC's action, and that of a state judge at Montgomery, Ala., are mere temporary moves, aimed technically at what will be finally overthrown.

Fri. 5-11-58

COLUMBIA, S. C., May 10 (AP).—The South Carolina Public Service Commission said today the United States Supreme Court has not ruled on intrastate travel segregation laws—and explained why it thinks so.

It said South Carolina laws requiring white and Negro passengers to ride separately on trains and buses within the state "are in full force and effect" despite a recent action of the United States Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court refused April 23 to review a case from Columbia in which a Negro woman, Sara Mae Flemming, sued the city bus operators for $25,000 because a driver insisted she sit separate from white passengers.

The court's refusal to review has been widely interpreted as upholding a Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals ruling in the case that bus segregation is unconstitutional. Some government lawyers disagreed.

In its ruling the Appeals Court contradicted a District Court decision by Judge George Bell Timmerman sr.,—father of South Carolina's Governor—that segregation was not a valid cause of action.

The Public Service Commission said the sole reason the Supreme Court refused to review the case was not because of the segregation issue, but because it just will not consider any case until a District Court has rendered a final judgment.

The Supreme Court's only reference in the dismissal was to Slaker vs O'Connor, a case in which the commission said the court declared it would not review a case until after final trial judgment.

Thus, the state commission said, the high court actually has not ruled one way or the other on bus segregation—a view taken by a number of lawyers, including State Attorney General T. C. Callison.

Preview Of A Pattern

(From The Christian Science Monitor)

The Montgomery (Alabama) City Lines, Inc., grievously hurt financially by the boycott of its busses by Montgomery Negroes, canceled its segregation ruling on hearing of the Supreme Court's decision. The City of Montgomery declares it will continue to enforce local laws and ordinances requiring segregation on public conveyances.

World P. 8

The officials point out the decision was handed down on a South Carolina, not an Alabama, case and that technically it did not deal with segregation at all. Montgomery Negroes, realizing they are caught in the middle, have voted to continue their boycott of the bus lines.

Tues. 5-8-56 B'ham Ala.

Legal opinion agrees the Supreme Court's decision of outlawing segregation on intra- as well as inter-state transportation. But it is true that technically the court's ruling dealt with whether in enforcing South Carolina's segregation laws the Columbia bus drivers were acting as employees of the company or as special police officers of the state. And Montgomery Negroes would be working against their own cause if they complied with local laws, and would be arrested if they didn't.

This may all seem quite frustrating to many on both sides of the segregation controversy. But it supports informed predictions that adjustment to desegregation ruling will have to be worked out state by state and community by community. It supports deductions that the high court, in ruling on the narrowest grounds possible, is giving latitude for adjustments to be made in just this fashion.

And one can hardly avoid noting such a process nevertheless may be affording the two races time to hammer out the multiplicity of new accommodations necessary for them to live side by side in harmony.

Set bus J. C. case Nov. 15

Afro-American Sat. 11-10-56

COLUMBIA, S.C.—Attorneys for Mrs. Sara Flemming Brown and the S.C. Electric and Gas Co. are scheduled to argue on appeal of a $25,000 civil rights suit before the Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Baltimore, Nov. 15.

Mrs. Brown sued the utility in 1954 after a driver had struck her in the stomach. She sought an end to segregated seating and damages.

District Court Judge George B. Timmerman Sr. dismissed the case, holding that the legal philosophy of the school cases (May 17, 1954) did not to apply to intrastate transportation.

* * *

HOWEVER, HE WAS overruled by the Fourth Circuit Court and the case was remanded for retrial and disposition of its damages provision.

In a surprise action, Judge Timmerman again threw the case out, issuing his ruling the first thing on the second day of its trial.

It is this angle which is again up on appeal.

The appeal is being aided by NAACP attorneys, in addition to a Columbia attorney hired by Mrs. Brown.

S. C. Bus Case Appeal Under Study

Defender P. 3

BALTIMORE — The case which originally led to the famous ruling by the Supreme Court that bus segregation is unconstitutional, is being studied by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals here.

In that litigation, Mrs. Sarah Mae Flemming Brown of Columbia, S. C., sued the Carolina Electric and Gas co. for $25,000 charging that her civil rights had been violated.

Judge George B. Timmerman dismissed her case on the grounds that the South Carolina segregation law involved had not been declared unconstitutional at the time Mrs. Brown says she was beaten by a bus driver for sitting in a seat where a white woman had been sitting.

Mrs. Brown's attorneys are appealing to the Circuit Court to reverse Judge Timmerman jr., and allow the case to go to a jury.

'An Unconstitutional Act Has No Validity'

Afro-American Sat. 11-24-56 Baltimore, Md.

P. 12

BALTIMORE

"An unconstitutional act has no validity at all . . . But for the statute, the bus driver would have had no authority to tell her to move."

This point was made Thursday by Robert L. Carter of the NAACP legal staff in his argument before the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in a $25,000 civil rights damage suit.

The New York attorney and Lincoln C. Jenkins Jr. of Columbia, S.C., appeared here on behalf of Mrs. Sarah Mae Flemming Brown who is suing the South Carolina Electric and Gas Company, operators of the transit system in Columbia.

The court heard arguments from both sides, but has not handed down an opinion.

* * *

MRS. BROWN is asking $25,000 for damages she allegedly suffered on June 22, 1954, when a bus driver ordered her to vacate a seat and struck her as she was leaving the bus.

District Court Judge George B. Timmerman Sr. of South Carolina, dismissed the suit against the transit company in February, 1955.

However, Mrs. Brown won the first round when the Court of Appeals here reversed the decision and sent the case back to South Carolina for trial.

The jurists ruled that "we do not think the separate but equal doctrine . . . can be regarded as a correct statement of the law."

(The U.S. Supreme Court in its ruling in the Montgomery, Ala., bus suit last week referred to this case in its decision.)

* * *

ON JUNE 13 Judge Timmerman again ruled against Mrs. Brown. Holding that the segregation laws in South Carolina at that time were valid, the jurist said: "No person has a civil right to violate a valid and subsisting state law."

In a brief filed by Mrs. Brown's attorneys, it is alleged that she boarded a crowded bus and stood in the forward section, later taking a seat vacated by a white woman.

(The court was told Thursday that the practice in South Carolina was for colored passengers to fill up the bus from the rear to the front and the whites from the front to the rear.)

The brief alleges that when Mrs. Brown took the seat, the bus driver "made a rude remark and ordered her to get up." It continues:

* * *

"AT THIS point, the appellant testified that she pulled the cord to leave the bus at the next stop, although she had not reached her destination, and attempted to follow two white people out of the front door but was ordered to get out through the back.

"In enforcing his command, the bus driver hit (the) appellant. . ."

Jurists who heard Thursday's arguments were Chief Judge John J. Parker, Circuit Judge Morris A. Soper and District Judge Walter E. Hoffman.

"I don't think the statutes say the bus driver has the right to strike a person," observed Judge Soper, "but certainly he was acting under the color of the state law."

* * *

JUDGE SOPER then asked Mr. Carter whether he thought the court's previous ruling against bus segregation in South Carolina could be made retroactive for the purposes of a damage suit.

It was then that Mr. Carter said, "But for the statute, the bus driver would have had no authority to tell her to move."

Frank B. Gary, one of the attorneys for the utility company, said the South Carolina segregation laws were drawn up under the philosophy of the Plessy vs. Ferguson case in which the Supreme Court set forth the "separate but equal" doctrine.

"Frankly, I can't understand why the United States Supreme Court has not taken any action in the case of Plessy vs. Ferguson," said Mr. Gary after commenting on the 1954 school integration ruling.

Retorted Judge Soper, "We overruled it, didn't we"

Civic leaders lose 1st round in S.C. suit

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Jan. 1-14-56

SUMTER, S.C. — The 12 executive board members of the Sumter NAACP branch who face a $12,000 damage suit of a white school board lawyer, lost the first round in a court battle here Tuesday.

Judge William H. Grimball denied the defendants a motion to dismiss the suit of the attorney and former state senator Shepard K. Nash.

Nash charges the NAACP leaders libeled him professionally when they denounced a statement he made several weeks ago about several persons who had asked their names be removed from an integration petition.

JUDGE GRIMBALL ordered the defendants to answer the Nash complaint within 20 days. Court attaches said it would not be scheduled during the present term of Common Pleas Court.

S. Carolina Depot Mixing Case Dropped

Constitution Wed. 2-29-56 P. 1

FLORENCE, S.C., Feb. 28 (AP)—Charges of resisting a police officer, placed against Clarence Mitchell, were dropped in City Court today. Mitchell, a Negro, is director of the Washington bureau of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

City Judge William Smith ordered a nol pros in the case after City Attorney Wylie Caldwell sa he didn't think he could get a conviction.

Atlanta, Ga.

Mitchell and the Rev. Horace P. Sharper, a Negro minister, were arrested on disorderly conduct charges at a railroad station last night after they refused to use an entrance provided for Negroes. The case against the Rev. Mr. Sharper also was nol-prossed.

The disorderly conduct charge was changed just before the case was called for trial to one involving violation of a city ordinance relating to persons interfering or resisting an officer trying to do his duty.

Mitchell and the Rev. Mr. Sharper pleaded innocent to the charges when the case was called before a packed City Court room.

Mitchell went directly from the court room to the railroad station and entered it through the white entrance. He spent some 10 minutes discussing his train reservations with ticket agent O. V. Player. While he was in the waiting room, some 50 to 60 Negroes gathered in the waiting room to watch, all entering through the white entrance.

Negroes Arrested, But City Doesn't Press Case

Wed. 2-29-56

FLORENCE, S.C., Feb. 28. — (UP)—Police arrested Clarence Mitchell, nationally known Negro leader, for refusing to use the back door at the railroad station here Monday night but the city declined to press charges at his trial Tuesday.

"I hope this means the end of segregation in Florence," said Mitchell, Washington, D.C., director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, as he left recorder's court.

Mitchell and Rev. Horace Sharper, a Negro Baptist minister from Sumter, S.C., were arrested Monday night when they attempted to enter the station by the front entrance. Mitchell went there to take a train to Washington.

The NAACP leader made bond but Sharper had to spend more than half an hour in jail before his bail could be raised. Mitchell later returned to Sumter with him.

The city attorney of Florence, S. C., declined yesterday to press charges against Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington Bureau of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mitchell was arrested at the Florence railroad station Monday night after he refused to use an entrance provided for Negroes.

When the case was called in Recorders Court, City Attorney Wylie Caldwell said, "I have investigated this matter with the arresting officer and a conviction is unlikely since we do not have a city ordinance covering the case. I hereby move that the case be nol prossed."

Mitchell said, "I hope this will be an end to segregation in florence."

The small courtroom was jammed to overflowing, mostly by Negroes, but standees were cleared from the room before the case was called.

Mitchell said he had been assured by Caldwell that nothing would happen if he returned to the station. He explained that when he posted $17 bond Monday night, he was warned that he would be arrested again, with a bond of $100, if he returned to the station. The NAACP official was scheduled to leave for Washington last night from Florence.

Mitchell said he and the Rev. Horace P. Sharper, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Sumter, S. C., went to the station Monday night to check on a ticket reservation.

Courier P. 9 Sat. 3-10-56

FLORENCE, S. C. — Police Chief C. Price was away from the city when Clarence M. Mitchell and the Rev. H. P. Sharper were arrested last week, but issued the following statement on his return:

Pittsburgh Pa.

"From the information that I have received concerning this incident, I am convinced that Patrolman Buffkin was certainly within his right in enforcing the state law. A municipal law enforcing agency should enforce all laws, city, state and Federal.

"Unfortunately the Atlantic Coast Line police have the same authority since they have been commissioned by the Governor of South Carolina."

FBI Is Probing Arrest of Negro In Rail Station

Constitution Thurs. 3-1-56 P. 1

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29 (AP)—The Justice Department said today it has directed the FBI to "get the facts" on the arrest of Clarence Mitchell, Washington Negro leader, at the Florence, S.C., railroad station Monday night.

Atlanta, Ga.

The inquiry is to determine whether there was any violation of federal civil rights laws.

Mitchell, director of the Washington Bureau of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, and the Rev. Horace P. Sharper, Negro minister from Sumter, S.C., were taken into custody when, they said, they refused to use an entrance for Negroes at the station.

Mitchell said the two had gone there to check on train reservations.

In Florence, S. C., Waiting Room Case

3-Minute Trial Ends Segregation

Courier Sat. 3-10-56 P. 2 Pittsburgh, Pa.

By A. M. RIVERA JR.

FLORENCE, S. C.—Waiting room segregation in this sleepy little South Carolina town died last week after a three-minute police court hearing before Judge William H. Smith.

The end to the traditional race segregation in the Florence railroad station followed the arrest and trial of Clarence M. Mitchell, Washington official of the NAACP and the Rev. H. P. Sharper, Baptist minister of Sumter, S. C.

The irony of the eighteen-hour drama was that it was completely unscheduled and unanticipated, according to Mitchell.

The weird chain of events that led up to the arrest of Mitchell and Sharper and the developments that preceded their acquittal happened this way:

MITCHELL AND SHARPER came to Florence about 11:15 P. M. from Sumter where Mitchell had delivered a speech.

They drove to the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Station where Mitchell planned to board a train to Washington, D. C.

Mitchell told the Courier that he pulled the door at the waiting room thinking that it opened out. A policeman, whom he later learned was B. E. Buffkin, was standing inside and pulled the door open.

Mitchell said that he thought the officer was helping him and was about to thank him for his aid when Buffkin told him and Sharper that they would have to go to the side door and use the Negro waiting room.

Mitchell let the officer know that he did not plan to go to the Negro waiting room and told Buffkin that there were no signs designating white and colored waiting rooms.

BUFFKIN IS SAID to have told Mitchell "When I'm here, I'm the sign." Mitchell then told the officer that he was an interstate passenger.

Buffkin then told Mitchell that he didn't care what the law said, "as long as I am a policeman no Negroes will use the white waiting room in Florence."

Mitchell said that after he convinced the officer that he had no intention whatever of going to any side door, Buffkin then said, "I have to call the wagon." Sharper then spoke up and said, "We're ready to go to jail."

The squad car was called and the pair was arrested. At the jail Sharper and Mitchell were told that their bail would be $17.

When they asked with what they were charged the officers said they would tell them at 8:00 A. M. This was the first inkling that Mitchell and Sharper had that the officers did not know what charge to place against them.

* * *

MITCHELL SAID that it was apparent also that they did not know that he was connected with the NAACP at the time of his arrest. He said that during the Minister Also Arrested

Also arrested was the Rev. Horace Sharper, a Negro Baptist minister from Sumter, S. C., who accompanied Mitchell when the latter went to the station to take a train to Washington.

The N.A.A.C.P. leader made bond, but Mr. Sharper had to spend more than half an hour in jail before his bail could be raised.

When the case was called today, City Attorney Wiley Caldwell said he had investigated the matter with the arresting officer and "a conviction is unlikely since we do not have a City ordinance covering the case. I hereby move that the case be nol prossed (not pressed)."

The officers commented, mumbling to themselves, "He must not ever read the Bible . . . what kind of a preacher is he anyway . . . what kind of a Bible does he read?"

When they found out that Sharper was from Sumter, one officer said, "I know he knows better."

Unable to pay his bond, Sharper had to call Rev. J. J. Abney to come to his rescue after Mitchell revealed that he had only $3 left from his bail. While he was waiting for Rev. Abney to bring bail, Buffkin locked Sharper in a cell for about thirty minutes.

THE FOLLOWING morning Attorneys W. W. Bennett, L. C. Jenkins and E. D. Turnage sought to find out what charge had been placed against the men.

They were told that the books had not been written up yet and to come back within a couple of hours. Shortly before noon the lawyers went back to find out what charges had been filed against Sharper and Mitchell and at this time they were shown section 417 of the city code which refers to interfering with an officer in the discharge of his duties.

Between noon and the time of the hearing (5:30 P. M.) Mitchell, Sharper and their lawyers went to the FBI agents to find out if they would investigate the incident.

* * *

FBI AGENT BYRD is said to have told the Negroes that they did not like to appear to be bringing pressure against local authorities and refused to go any further than taking the statements of Mitchell and Sharper.

The climax of the drama came at the Recorder's Court when several hundred Negroes from Florence and nearby towns overflowed the segregated courtroom.

South Carolina bus case again is dismissed

News P. 1
Birmingham, Ala.
Wed. 6-13-56

COLUMBIA, S. C., June 13 — (AP) — U. S. District Judge George Bell Timmerman Sr., today dismisesd a second time a celebrated bus segregation case.

Mrs. Sarah Mae Fleming Brown, Columbia Negro woman, sought $25,000 actual and punitive damages on the ground that her civil rights were violated by a bus driver for South Carolina Electric & Gas Co.

She contended the bus driver ordered her to vacate a front seat in a crowded bus in June, 1954, and then struck her with his fist when she attempted to leave the bus by the front exit.

AFTER JUDGE TIMMERMAN dismissed the action originally, the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the decision when it held that segraegation on buses operating within states is unconstitutional.

When the suit was appealed by the company, with the backing of the state and city of Columbia, the U. S. Supreme Court last April refused to review the case. At first it was believed the Supreme Court action upheld the Circuit Court decision but later it was interpreted to mean the appeal was premature.

IN DISMISSING the action again, Judge Timmerman did so on the ground that the Circuit Court decision could not be made to apply retroactively. The bus driver, he said, was acting at the time under "valid and subsisting" state law requiring segregation of races in public transportation.

The company, therefore, could not be liable, Judge Timmerman said.

He also held that the plaintiff's testimony yesterday was that no white people were behind her when she took the seat from which she was ordered by the bus driver.

THE ORDER for her to move, Timmerman said, had to be for some other reason than her color. That reason, he added, would be outside the court's jurisdiction.

Trial of the case, which began yesterday, never reached the all-white jury.

Damage Suit In Race Tiff Ordered Out

Advertiser P. 1
Montgomery, Ala.
Thurs. 6-14-56

COLUMBIA, S.C., June 13 (AP)—A Federal district court case involving race segregation on city buses was thrown out today on grounds that a Negro woman "has shown no right to relief."

The order dismissing the $25,000 damage suit against the South Carolina Electric and Gas Co., was issued by Judge George Bell Timmerman.

It was Timmerman's second dismissal of the case, brought by Sarah Mae Flemming Brown as a result of a 1954 ride on a crowded bus. She charged her civil rights were violated when the bus driver allegedly ordered her to vacate a front seat, then struck her when she attempted to leave by the front exit.

Timmerman ruled that the company could not be made "liable in damages" for acting under "valid and subsisting" state segregation laws at the time.

Dismissal of the suit once before in the District Court, without a final determination on the question of damages, brought it to the Court of Appeals and then to the Supreme Court.

In the Court of Appeals, it was held that the state's segregation laws were invalid and Mrs. Brown had a cause of action. The U. S. Supreme Court did not directly pass on the issue, but sent the case back on a point of technical procedure.

Bus Segregation Case Goes Back To Appeals Court

Washington D.C.
Thurs. 7-12-56

COLUMBIA, S. C., July 12 (AP).—The Columbia bus segregation case is back in a Federal appellate court.

P. 18-C

Attorney Philip Wittenberg said yesterday he had filed an appeal with the 4th Federal Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va., in behalf of Mrs. Sarah Mae Flemming Brown of Columbia.

Mrs. Brown, a Negro, is seeking $25,000 damages from the South Carolina Electric and Gas Co., operator of the city buses in Columbia. Mrs. Brown claims that her civil rights were violated when she was forced to vacate her seat in the front of a bus in June, 1954. She also charges that she was struck by a bus driver when she attempted to leave by a front entrance.

Last month Judge George Bell Timmerman dismissed the case on the grounds that Mrs. Brown "has shown no right to relief."

Once before Judge Timmerman threw out the case, only to have his decision overruled by the appeals court. The bus company appealed and the United States Supreme Court refused to study the case and ordered it to trial.

Federal Judge Dismisses Civil Rights Damage Suit

Atlanta Ga. Thurs. 6-14-56

COLUMBIA, S. C. — (INS) — A federal court judge Wednesday dismissed a $25,000 damage suit, holding a Negro woman involved in a bus seating dispute in Columbia was in violation of a valid state law at the time.

Judge George Bell Timmerman dismissed the action of Mrs. Sarah Mae Flemming Brown, who had charged her civil rights were violated when she was required to move from a front seat of a bus.

The case had moved before to the U. S. Supreme Court, which sent it back for further proceedings. The Supreme Court action was interpreted in some legal quarters as a declaration that intra-city bus segregation was illegal.

Judge Timmerman held that at the time of the incident over which Mrs. Brown sued the South Carolina Electric and Gas Company, the state's segregation laws were in effect. The judge observed:

"No person has the civil right to violate a valid and existing state law."

Attorneys for the woman said they would consider whether to appeal the ruling.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD

R. R. settles local's jim crow suit

Courier p. 19

Los Angeles, Calif.

For a Texas ticket agent's abiding faith in segregation, the Texas & New Orleans Railroad paid Mrs. Dorothy Hall, of Los Angeles, $500 last week.

Mrs. Hall sued Southern Pacific Railroad in Federal Court last September, asking damages for discrimination.

38b

When she went to Port Arthur, Tex. to pick up her reservations for the Sunset Limited to Los Angeles, Mrs. Hall charged, she was refused, and ticket agent O. E. Easley put it in writing. . . . "This is to certify that I, the undersigned, made a reservation for Dorothy Hall . . . I took application on the phone and got white reservations. The error was an honest one and I have tried to get reservations for Aug. 3 for colored and cannot get them."

She got the note, Mrs. Hall said, for her employer to explain her late return from her vacation.

Train she returned on, the Argonaut, customarily reserved for Negroes, was vastly inferior to the Sunset Limited, took 11½ hours longer, was hot, crowded and unclean, and there was no seat for her and she was forced to stand most of the trip, Mrs. Hall alleged in her action. The train was owned by the T & O, a connecting carrier to the S. P.

After the case was filed, however, the Inter-State Commerce Commission ruled segregation in inter-state commerce illegal and the Southern Pacific abandoned its jim crow policy, so that "legal points which would have been raised . . . no longer have any compelling purpose", Mrs. Hall's lawyer, Leo Branton, said in stating why his client accepted the $500 settlement.

ICC Asked to Approve N. C. Marine Railroad Lease

Norfolk Ledger-Star Jan. 13-14 1956

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13 (AP) — The Southern Railway System, the Marine Corps and North Carolina joined today in asking the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve Southern's proposal to lease a Marine railroad serving Camp Lejeune and Cherry Point, N.C.

The three filed briefs urging the commission to reject an examiner's recommendation that the proposal be denied on the ground it would have "serious adverse effect" on the Atlantic Coast Line and the Norfolk Southern Railroad.

Southern had asked that it be permitted to lease and operate the 36-mile Marine railroad between Havelock and Jacksonville, N.C., while acquiring control on the Atlantic & East Carolina Railway, which operates a state-owned line between Goldsboro and Morehead City, N.C.

Examiner H. J. Blond recommended approval of the proposal to buy the state line but urged rejection of Southern's plan to operate the Marine railroad, which was recently completed at a cost of three million dollars.

Blond's report also said the proposed Southern lease would provide insufficient revenue return to the government and suggested the proposals".

In today's briefs, the three protestants charged Blond with failing to consider public interest and necessity and national defense requirements. They stressed that Southern's applications made it "crystal clear" that it is not interested in acquiring control of either railroad unless approved for both.

The ICC will consider the briefs along with Blond's recommendations in making its final decision.

The Southern Railway, which operates between Washington, D. C. and the Deep South, announced that "Colored" and "White" signs on its waiting rooms were taken down as far as interstate travelers were concerned.

However, the Southern operates in many states with segregation laws and these would have to be observed with respect to intrastate travel.

In principle, this means separate waiting rooms for Negro and white passengers who start and end their trip within one state. But distinguishing between an interstate and intrastate passenger at any given station seemed to make the segregation impractical.

W. Thomas Rice, president of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac, said the segregation signs would come down on its waiting rooms between Richmond and Washington. He said his line had no problem concerning interstate and intrastate travelers.

Several other railroads operating in the south said they have no problem.

The Baltimore and Ohio, which operates in Kentucky and Virginia said there is no segregation on trains. Officials said conforming with the ICC decree on waiting room facilities and complying with state segregation laws was under discussion.

The Illinois Central Railroad, operating from Chicago to Louisiana, ordered integration of its trains and railroad stations shortly after the ICC handed down its decree.

Two Railroads In South Start Integration

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — Two railroads operating in the Deep South, — the Southern Railway and the Richmond, Fredericksburg and the Potomac railroad — began operating last Tuesday on a non-segregated basis, complying with an Interstate Commerce Commission order to end jim crow practices by Jan. 10.

The Southern Railway, which operates between Washington, D. C., and the Deep South, announced that "Colored" and "White" signs on its waiting rooms were taken down as far as interstate travelers were concerned.

Tenn. Law Attacked

(Special to the AFRO)

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — "Quite often a colored rider is asked to get up from his seat on a bus for a white person.

"If he refuses, he is hailed into court and charged $25 for violating a state law."

So explained H. G. Lockard, president of the Memphis NAACP, to the AFRO, Saturday.

MR. LOCKARD is the attorney for O. Z. Evers, 31, a postal worker, who, Tuesday, filed a suit in Federal Court attacking the constitutionality of the state's bus segregation laws.

Mr. Evers, the AFRO was told, was seated on a bus on April 26 with G.L. Myers, also a postal worker, when they were asked by the driver, Warren G. Alexander, to move.

When they refused, the driver summoned police. Officers J. A. Renfrow and B. L. Myers answered the call and gave Evers and Myers the alternative of leaving the vehicle or facing arrest.

They decided to leave the bus.

THE SUIT, filed by Evers, names as defendants Mayor Edmond Orgill, Commissioners John Dwyer, Claude Armour, Henry Loeb, and Stanley Dillard;

Police Chief C. J. MacDonald, Officers Renfrow and Myers, Alexander, the bus driver, and the Memphis Street Railways.

The District Court has been asked to issue a temporary injunction to restrain the defendants from enforcing the state laws providing for segregated buses.

"THERE IS no concerted effort to stage a boycott in Memphis as has been in Montgomery or Tallahassee, Lockard reported.

"I hear that in Knoxville, the buses are integrated, but I can't verify that report," he said.

Lockard is the attorney in a suit against Memphis State College. He is protesting a gradual integration plan offered by college authorities.

Threats and Fiery Cross Fail To Stop Memphis Man's Fight on Bus Bias

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — (ANP) — A Negro postman here declared last week that neither threats of death nor "cross burnings" will make him drop his one-man fight against bus segregation in Tennessee.

O. Z. Evers, who recently filed a suit in federal courts attacking the constitutionality of Tennessee's bus segregation laws, made the statement to reporters after a three-foot gasoline soaked cross was burned in front of his modest brick home last week.

Witnesses said the cross blazed high as a nearby 25-foot tree.

Evers said he was not at home when the cross was burned.

He said he has been harassed by threats as a result of the federal suit.

"I have had hundreds of telephone calls," he said. "They threaten my life and call me a black N----r.

"It's just some of those diehards who cannot face the facts," he added.

Both Democrats And Republicans Troubled By Intra-Party Disputes—Mississippi Showdown Is Expected Tuesday

By LOUIS SILVER

A MEMPHIS-INSTITUTED suit attacking Tennessee's bus segregation laws, Democratic and Republican internal squabbles in Memphis and a politically explosive issue in Mississippi made the major Mid-South headlines last week.

O. Z. Evers of 671 Lipford, Negro distribution clerk for the Postal Transportation Service, filed a suit in Federal Court here charging the state segregation statutes are in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

He asked that the Tennessee laws be declared "null and void." Evers claimed he was humiliated on a Memphis Street Railway Co. coach last April 26 when he refused the operator's request that he move from a front to a rear seat. Police were called and gave Evers the choice of obeying the operator, getting off the coach or facing arrest. He chose to leave the coach.

Police investigated the burning of a cross in front of Evers' home late on the night the suit was filed.

Sanctioned by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the suit was brought against the City Commission, as individuals; Memphis Street Railway Co.; its operator, Warren G. Alexander; Police Chief J. C. Macdonald, and two patrolmen, J. A. Renfrow and B. L. Rogers.

A group of independent Shelby County Democrats made plans for a "rump" convention at 8:30 next Thursday night at the Fairgrounds to choose a new county executive committee. The independent group, which includes supporters of Mayor Edmund Orgill and Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.), contends that the two-year term of the committee headed by attorney John Heiskell ended June 4. Thomas L. Robinson, attorney, was named temporary chairman of the dissident group.

Mr. Heiskell declined an invitation of that group that he call a convention and said ample advance notice will be given when he decides to issue such a call.

Bus Bias Dispute Hits Memphis

By the United Press.

ATLANTA, June 6. — Segregated bus seating, banned in Montgomery by a federal court decision and boycotted in Tallahassee, came under fire today in Memphis.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People filed suit at Memphis yesterday, attacking constitutionality of a state law requiring bus segregation and urging a speedy hearing before a three-judge federal court panel.

Law Ruled Illegal.

Montgomery's and the State of Alabama's laws requiring Negroes and whites to sit apart was declared unconstitutional yesterday in a 2-1 decision.

There was no sign, however, of an immediate ending of the six-month Negro boycott of Montgomery's city transit system.

White leaders were just as adamant. C. C. Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, said "we will use every legal resource at our command to prevent the serious consequences that would follow its (the decision's) enforcement."

Col. Roane Waring, president of Memphis Street Railway Co., said the firm "can make no change in the manner of seating. We must follow state statute which says that passengers must be segregated."

A gasoline-soaked wood cross was burned last night in front of the home of O. Z. Evers, the Negro postal employee who filed the Memphis desegregation suit. Mr. Evers was not at home at the time.

Appeal Planned.

Montgomery and Alabama officials said they would appeal and the court granted two weeks to both sides in which to submit suggestions for a formal ruling and to give time for the filing of an appeal.

The continuing battle over segregation in Dixie also produced these developments:

● Some 500 cheering and applauding Negroes formed the Anti-Segregation Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights in Birmingham last night, just five days after the NAACP was barred under a temporary injunction from "further activities" in the state.

● The city commission at Delray Beach, Fla., where racial tension over the use of beach facilities almost reached the riot stage on one occasion voted to ask the Florida legislature to re-define the city boundaries "by excluding the entire Negro area therefrom."

● Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D., N. Y.) told graduates of Morehouse College in Atlanta that a dozen whites and Negroes would meet in New York Saturday to determine whether the "time is ripe" for a nationwide movement against segregation similar to the bus boycotts.

Knoxville Bus Lines Are Desegregated

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., April 25 (AP)—Knoxville's bus system began operating Wednesday on a desegregated basis.

The decision to end segregation on the city's public transit system was announced by James E. Burke, president of Knoxville Transit Lines. Burke said the order was effective immediately. It follows a supreme court ruling Monday that intrastate transit segregation is unconstitutional.

At the same time, Burke also announced that Tennessee Coach Co., which he heads, had adopted a policy of desegregation on its intrastate buses.

The firm, with franchises in Tennessee, Georgia, Virginia and Wes Virginia, has operated its iter interstate corriers on an integrated basis for more than three months.

"We anticipate no trouble," city safety director David M. Garrison said. "Of course, we will maintain order if any trouble should arise."

A Knoxville News-Sentinel check of several buses showed Negroes were continuing to observe the long-standing policy of segregated seating, with white passengers sitting toward the front and Negroes toward the rear.

Knoxville is the second city in Tennessee to have public carrier de-segregation. Oak Ridge buses have been operating on an integrated basis for nearly two years.

Bus company officials at Oak Ridge said there had been no major incidents resulting from desegregation.

Negro Asks Court Declare Jimcro Out On Tennesse' Buses

Little Rock, Ark. 38

(From The Memphis World)

A civil action suit asking that all Tennessee codes requiring segregation of passengers on public transit vehicles be declared "null and void" and in violation of the 14th amendment was filed Tuesday in Federal District Court in Memphis by O. Z. Evers, postal employee of 671 Lipford.

Evers was one of two Negroes involved in an April 26 bus incident in Memphis.

On April 26, Evers in the company of his next door neighbor, G. L. Myers of 675 Lipford, also a postal employee, about 12:30 p. m. boarded a No. 7 "Crosstown" Memphis Street Railway trolley (number 1011) at Lamar and Bellevue and together took a seat near the front.

The bus driver, identified as Warren G. Alexander, asked Evers and Myers to move to the back, pointing out that "the law" required Negro and whites to be separated.

After they refused to move Evers stated the driver, described by him as "very nice manners", stated that he would then have to call the police. He stopped at the fire station on Bellevue near Walker where he apparently called the police.

Shortly after two policemen, later identified as J. A. Renfrow and B. L. Rodgers, boarded the trolley. The officers, according to Evers, gave them the option of moving to the rear or leaving the bus. The two postal employees chose to leave the bus.

The suit filled by Evers thru Attorney H. T. Lockhard, president of the Memphis NAACP, asks that (1) a three judge court be set up to hear the case, (2) that a temporary injunction be issued restraining the defendants from enforcing sections 1704 thru 1708 of Title 65 of the Tennessee Codes which require transit segregation and (3) that a final judgment be rendered declaring the cited sections as "unconstitutional and therefore null and void in that they deny due process of law and equal protection of the law" under the 14th amendment and section 1981 of Title 42 of the United States Code.

State Press P. 1

"Any other remedy would be delays as to deny substantive relief, would involve a multiplicity attended by such uncertainties and of suits and cause further irreparable injury, damage and inconvenience", the suit declared.

The five cited sections of Title 65 of the Tennessee Codes require transit segregation in the state. Section 1704 declares: "portions of car to be set apart and designated for each race." Section 1705 requires "printed signs to indicate cars or parts of cars for each race." Section 1706 gives the conductor the right to increase or diminish space for either race or require change of seats". "Refusal of passengers to take seats assigned by conductor and designated for their race or to leave car" is a misdemeanor carrying a maximum fine of $25 according to Section 1707." "Failure to set apart portions of car for each race" is also a misdemeanor carrying a maximum $25 fine according to Section 1708.

Commissioner of Public Service John T. (Buddy) Dwyer, the three other city commissioners, Mayor Orgill, Police Chief J. C. Macdonald, the two policemen, the bus driver and the Memphis Street Railway co. are named as defendants in the suit.

Assisting Attorney Lockard will be Robert Carter and Thurgood Marshall of the National NAACP legal Staff.

The nite following the filing of the suit by Mr. Evers, a cross was burned in front of his home. He was not at home when the incident occurred, but a neighbor reported it.

The next day Mr. Evers reported receiving a number of threatening calls and that three ambulances came to his house answering bogus calls that he had been killed.

Jurists To Consider Negro's Challenge Of Law

Wed. 7-5-56

A three-judge court to hear a Memphis Negro postal employe's challenge of state segregation laws on public transportation has been named by Chief Judge Charles C. Simons of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Memphis Press P. 1

The high jurist selected Circuit Judge John D. Martin of Memphis and Judge William E. Miller of Nashville to consider the case with Judge Marion S. Boyd in Federal Court here.

In a suit sanctioned by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, O. Z. Evers of 671 Lipford contended the segregation statutes are in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Evers, a distribution clerk for the Postal Transportation Service, asked for a three-judge court to decide the constitutionality question and to enter an injunction forbidding enforcement of the segregation laws.

Defendants are the City Commission as individuals, Memphis Street Railway Co.; its operator, Warren G. Alexander; Police Chief J. C. Macdonald and two police patrolmen.

The officers gave Evers the choice of moving to the rear of a MSR coach last April 26, getting off or facing arrest when they found him sitting in an area for whites. He left the bus.

In a second order filed in Federal Court here, Judge Simmons named the same judges to consider an appeal from an Interstate Commerce Commission ruling. The appeal is sought by W. H. Wooten of W. H. Wooten Transport Co.

Bus suit filed by Memphis man

Pro-American Baltimore, Md.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (ANP)—A suit, asking that the Tennessee law requiring segregation on buses be declared unconstitutional, was filed here last week, and a three-judge court has been appointed to head the case.

O. Z. Evers, a postal employee, brought the suit against city officials, the Memhis Street Railway Co. and two police officers who, he said, caused his arrest when he refused to move to the rear of a city bus.

FINED $16 FOR FAILURE TO MOVE FROM 'WHITE' SEAT

BY R. F. TISBY

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — (SNS) — Miss Maurice White, 18, the young lady who Tuesday was fined in City Court on a charge of disorderly conduct for her alleged failure to move from a "white" bus seat on a number 12 trolley, when approached by the Memphis World Wednesday refused to comment on the incident.

Miss White, when reached by the Memphis World at 1800 Hunter Ave. where she resides in a new semi ranch style house, said she had no comment to make on the affair, however she denied that there was any commotion as reported by the coach operator.

The incident occurred Monday on a number 12 trolley driven by W. C. Harder going north on Main. According to Harder Miss White was occupying a seat directly behind him when some passengers began getting off at Jefferson because, Harder felt, they were anticipating trouble.

Harder claimed he asked Miss White four times to move from her seat and she refused.

In court Miss White told Judge Beverly Boushe she didn't see any reason why she should move.

The attorney for the transit company, Palmer Miller, referred to the state code which requires transit companies to mark the Negro and white sections in the vehicles and cited the penalty for ignoring the sign.

In meting out the fine Judge Boushe held that "on a street car or bus, the operator has the right to regulate his bus and keep down disturbances."

Dwyer And Waring Expect No Trouble Over The Matter Of Seating

Commercial Appeal Tues. 4-24-56

Neither the city nor the Memphis Street Railway Co. has plans to desegregate riders on buses and coaches here.

Public Service Commissioner John T. Dwyer, whose department has jurisdiction over MSR, said, "We've got a Jim Crow (segregation) law in Tennessee and I'm not going to tell them to desegregate and violate the law."

Company Can't Change

He said that Memphis has had very little difficulty with Negroes and whites riding the public transit system and added he believes there would have to be a test case of the state segregation law before any change comes about.

Col. Roane Waring, MSR president, pointed out his company could make no change in the manner of seating passengers, "because we've got to follow the state statute which says passengers must be segregated."

"We've got a Jim Crow law here and I think we are going to continue to have it," Colonel Waring said.

He said he thought the segregation law here "is one of the fairest laws in the whole South," pointing out that Negroes take sea ts from the rear of the bus and white passengers from the front.

'Had No Trouble Here'

"We've had no trouble here because the colored people understand the law," Colonel Waring said.

R. C. Tucker, assistant regional manager of Greyhound bus line, declined comment on the decision of the United States Supreme Court, saying that any statement would have to come from the company's regional office in Lexington, Ky.

Tennessee Faces Segregation Suit

Advertiser Mon. Montgomery

MEMPHIS, June 5 (AP) — The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) filed suit in federal court today asking that Tennessee bus segregation statutes be declared unconstitutional.

Ala.

The suit asks:

1. A three-judge court to hold a "speedy hearrring" and issue a temporary injunction restraining the city of Memphis and the Memphis Street Railway Company from enforcing the Tennessee bus segregation statutes.

2. That the court upon a final hearing declare the state law unconstitutional—therefore null and void.

Wed. 6-6-56

Roane Waring, president of privately owned Memphis Street Railway, said his company "can make no change in the manner of seating passengers on our buses. We must follow the state statue . . . The fact that we have had no trouble here over segregation laws is a tribute to the good citizenship, and goodwill of both races."

The suit asks that "Negro citizens be granted similar privileges and immunities given all citizens of the United States, due process of law and the equal protection of the laws secured by the 14th amendment to the national Constitution."

Named as plaintiffs were O. Z. Evers, Memphis Negro, and all similarly situated—in other words, all Negroes.

The suit said that on April 29, 1956, Evers sat in the front of a city bus. Two city policemen told Evers to move to the rear of the bus, get off or be arrested. Evers got off the bus.

Under present policy of the bus company, Negroes are required to seat themselves from the back to the front, and whites from the front to the back.

Thugs Rout Negroes Who Snub Bus Rear

Chicago Ill. Sat. 8-4-56

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — The local police last week refused to protect a Negro couple and their four children from a mob of young thugs who ran them off a bus because they refused to sit in the rear of the vehicle.

The J. R. Ross family, of 2125 Major ave., also has accused the driver of the bus, W. R. Tillery, of summoning the gang to intimidate them and then telling them, "You can read."

(The Knoxville Transit Lines have not removed their segregation signs.)

Mrs. Ross explained that her family boarded the vehicle at Keith, Schofield and Western aves., with the children getting on first and taking seats about half way in the bus. She and her husband sat immediately behind them.

When the bus arrived at Alexander Park, the driver (Tillery), she said, stopped and called out to a group of loiterers:

"All right boys, I need some help. Get aboard."

Eight youths, ranging in age from 16 to 20 got on and took seats in the back of the bus, Mrs. Ross added, and immediately began making loud remarks about who was to ride in the rear seats.

The youths did not pay any fares, it was stated, and when the loud remarks failed to draw any comments from the Negro passengers, the gang got up and ordered the Ross family to get up and sit in the back of the bus.

At that point, Ross appealed to the driver who made his remark about the racial signs.

Fearful that his children would be injured, Ross took his family off the bus at the next stop and called the police to handle the mob. Police quickly informed them there was nothing they could do.

Mrs. Ross later attempted to get KTL authorities to take action, but was unable to speak with anyone in authority at the line.

A local newspaper also was unsuccessful in getting the lines to make a statement in regard to bus policy.

Bus Segregation Attacked in Memphis

not object to paying fair and equitable taxes. What it does object to, they said, is paying discriminatory taxes — taxes paid only by bus riders.

In trolley-car days, the franchise to operate a transit system in Memphis was worth something. MSR operating its street cars got something in return. There were only a few automobiles and the trolley franchise was valuable.

Today, conditions have changed, but the tax remains the same.

Some cities have been farsighted enough to remove the franchise tax.

In Dallas, the gross recepits tax was reduced from 5 per cent to one-half of 1 per cent in 1954. That same year, Portland officials chopped its tax rate from 5 per cent to 1 per cent. Baltimore, which had a high franchise tax of 9 per cent, reduced it to 3 per cent over a five-year period.

42 Million In 1955

In 1953, Dayton, Ohio, reduced its tax against the transit system from 5 per cent to 1 per cent and the same year Tulsa lowered its rate from 4 to 2 per cent. Salt Lake City completely eliminated such a tax in 1953, and Jackson, Miss., wiped its rate off the books in 1951.

Memphis, with a 6 per cent franchise tax to pay every year, carried only 42 million passengers last year with its operating revenue totaling six million dollars.

But in cities where there is no

Daily $1,000 Franchise Tax Is Discriminatory, Says MSR

Commercial Appeal Memphis, Tenn. Mon. 7-16-56

(Last of Two Articles)

By RICHARD T. ALLEN

What is this franchise tax which Memphis Street Railway Co. pays the city every year?

Amounting now to more than $1,000 a day, the tax has been paid by MSR since 1945 when the city granted the transit firm its current 20-year franchise. The 6 per cent tax was one of the conditions on which the franchise was granted—at a time (the last month of the war) when transit riding was high and revenues solid.

Funds from the tax are used by the city for its general purposes. The tax, however, is reflected in the bus fare from which it is derived.

Thus, the general city tax is really paid by only a portion of the city's population — the bus riders. That portion of the population which does not use public transit gets the benefit of this tax, but pays no part of it.

End Tallahassee Boycott: No Buses

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (ANP) — In a new series of meetings called to discuss the situation arising from the end of bus services here, Negro leaders and city officials conferred again last week, but no definite action was taken.

Both sides, however, reported a clearing of the atmosphere as a result of the meetings.

At the same time, Rev. K. S. Dupont, vice president of the Negro Inter Civic Council, said Tallahassee Negroes have no desire to boycott downtown merchants.

INTIMIDATION

Such an economic boycott had been suggested as a possibility by Council President C. K. Steele, who accused local police of "intimidating" Negro motorists because of the bus protest.

Dupont said it had been decided it would be best for Negro car pool routes to avoid the two main downtown streets to avoid arrests for traffic violations, but that this would not necessarily bring a boycott of stores.

Bus service in the city has been discontinued and C. L. Coleman, owner of the bus line, has rejected, with indignation, an offer of financial aid to keep the buses rolling in the face of the boycott.

NOT A CHARITY

A group of white citizens offered to pass the hat so that bus service could go on. But on hearing it, Mayor Fred S. Winterle said Coleman declared:

"I'm not operating a charity."

Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of the boycott which began May 29 with the arrest of two Florida A & M co-eds for refusing to sit in the back of a segregated bus and ended Saturday with suspension of operations by the bus company, declared:

"I am beginning to think our city policemen are trying to run us out of town."

Steele, president of the Negro Inter-Civic Council, told a mass meeting of more than 500 persons that Negroes are being arrested "for the slightest traffic violation" and are subject to a "third degree" at police headquarters.

Steele said that if police action did not end, it might become necessary to "spend what little money we have in other nearby cities."

He said many Negroes are being arrested while operating car pools. "When police can't find grounds to arrest us, they just holler at us and tell us to move on," Steele continued.

Meanwhile, this city of 48,000 people was without bus service. Car pools were being hastily set up and a meeting of the City Commission was scheduled for Monday to discuss ways of providing emergency transportation for whites.

The Negroes are planning to operate their own bus if they are allowed to do so under law. The bus is an old vehicle similar to school buses. The group is also calling for more station wagons to provide transportation for the town's estimated 14,000 Negroes.

Mayor Fred S. Winterle said he had no idea when the city would again have bus service. But he added that "Negroes will never get a franchise to operate a line while I'm on the City Commission."

City workers Monday were busy painting new markers for parking spaces in places that had been bus stops since 1941, when Cities Transit Inc. began operating.

5 SHIPPED TO CUBA

Five of the company's buses were shipped to Cuba Monday after being sold to a bus company in that country.

Negroes had made up 70 per cent of the passenger load on Tallahassee buses and accounted for 60 per cent of the bus line's revenue.

Their leaders have refused a bus company offer which would place Negro drivers on predominately Negro runs and allow free seating on the bus except for three seats in the front which would be reserved for whites.

DENIES INTIMIDATION

Police Chief Frank Stoutamire denied Steele's charges Monday afternoon. He said police were cracking down on all traffic violators and added:

"I have never seen any third degree. In fact, I've never seen anyone mistreated as long as I have been police chief. I wouldn't stand for it."

Meanwhile, the City Commission held a closed door meeting but apparently discussed only the overall siuation. Taxi companies reported only a "slight" increase in business.

franchise tax, the passenger and revenue figures soar.

Minneapolis, with no tax, hauled 86 million passengers and obtained revenue of 16 million dollars. Cincinnati carried 72 million passengers with an operating revenue of 12.9 million dollars. Philadelphia, with no tax, had 412 million passengers and its operating revenue totaled 72.6 million dollars.

The Kansas City transit system, which pays a 3 per cent tax, had 66 million passengers and its operating revenue was 11.4 million dollars.

Basing its forecast on a 9 per cent decline in riding trend, MSR estimates that in 1956 it will operate to the red-ink tune of $105,038. The forecast reckons with $6,059,110 derived from passenger and other service revenue against operating expenses, including interest, totaling $6,165,148.

Expenses Are Listed

Of MSR expense in 1956, $3,990,724 will go for maintenance, transportation, fuel and other items; $584,682 general and administrative expense; $212,068 injuries and damages; $736,280 for taxes other than Federal income tax and $641,394 for depreciation and interest.

In 1955, MSR paid $402,387 to the city as its gross receipts franchise tax. In addition, the company paid the city $142,560 as ad valorem tax and $409 for licenses on its cars and trucks. This adds up to $545,356 paid the city in taxes in 1955.

In recommending the blanket adoption of the transit survey report, the Transit Study Committee told the Mayor and City Commissioners:

"The type of transit which Memphis needs and must have cannot be provided by a system constantly forced to utilize dwindling reserves for survival. Under such conditions it cannot finance essential new equipment; it must watch pennies so closely it cannot embark on large-scale and bold plans for improvements, particularly those involving an element of risk."

Plans Are Outlined

The TSC said the "new look" in transit service could be put in effect under one of two fare structures. The first plan, based on elimination of the six per cent franchise tax, would provide fares of 25 cents for express service, 15 cents for local service, and 12½ cents for school service.

The second plan, based on continued collection of the tax, would make the price of express service 30 cents, the hiking of local service to 17 cents and the cost of school service 12½ cents.

"The committee believes that the lowest possible fare structure is the most desirable," the Mayor and commissioners were told.

MONTGOMERY BUS LINES TOLD TO CONTINUE BUS SEGREGATION

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (SNS) — Applications from Negroes for jobs as bus drivers are now be accepted by the Nashville Transit Co., operators of the city's bus system, it was announced Wednesday.

For first time, the Nashville Transit Company accepted applications from Negroes for jobs as bus drivers. The firm says qualifications are the same as for whites. Driver applicants must be at least 25 years old; have no police record; be a high school graduate, have top credit rating. The plan was announced after meeting bus line officials and representatives of Citizens Rights Committee. Committee member, Rev. L. Evans, says similar plans are set for discussion today with Chattanooga bus officials. Rev. Evans is pastor of a Negro church.

Meanwhile, in Montgomery a state court judge ordered the Montgomery City Lines to comply with Alabama State laws requiring segregation in buses.

Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones, granting the request of city officials held all city and state segregation laws still remain in force. He ordered the subsidiary of National City Lines, of Chicago, to "comply with and abide by all the provisions" of the local laws.

The company announced an end to its policy of enforcing segregation laws after a recent Supreme Court decision was interpreted as outlawing intra-state bus seating segregation. Judge Jones said a subsequent interpretation of the court's action held it to be merely sending a case back to a lower court for further proceedings. Jones declared: World P. 8

"There is no straight-out decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that a city or state may not require the separation of the races on buses where carriage of passengers is solely intrastate."

The bus company's desegregation action was ineffectual. Montgomery Negroes continued to boycott the buses, as they have since a Negro woman was arrested in December for refusing to move to a rear seat.

White Boy Fined After Bus Fight With Negro Rider

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., May 3 (AP)—A white youth was fined $50 in city court today on a charge of disorderly conduct growing out of a fight with a Negro on a city bus last night. The Negro had refused to move farther back in the bus, testimony showed.

Fri. 5-4-56

The disorder was the first reported incident on a Southern Coach Lines bus since the recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling, some have interpreted as prohibiting segregation in intrastate transportation.

Montgomery, Ala.

The bus line has not ordered integration in its seating.

Both the white boy, Ray Pope, 18, and Lawrence Curry, 23, the Negro, had been charged with disorderly conduct, but Judge Riley Graham dismissed the count against Curry.

Graham said proof showed Curry was "sitting well in the back" of the vehicle when the incident occurred and that Pope "struck the first blow."

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — A blond youth was fined $50 in city court, Thursday, on a charge of disorderly conduct growing out of a fight with a colored person on a city bus.

The fight, according to testimony, began over the colored youth's refusal to move back in the bus. P. 1

The white youth, Ray Pope, 18, and Lawrence Curry, 23, were both charged with disorderly conduct. However, Judge Riley Graham dismissed the charge against Curry ruling that Pope "struck the first blow."

The two were arrested following a fight which ensued after Pope asked Curry to move further toward the rear of the Market Street bus. Pope admitted today in court that he struck Curry after the Negro refused to move.

Judge Graham said in fining Pope, "It wasn't up to him to ask Curry. If he wanted him to move he should have asked the bus driver."

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., May 3 (U.P.)—A white man was fined $50 today on charges of disorderly conduct resulting from a dispute with a Negro over a seat on a city bus. P. 32

City Judge Riley Graham fined Ray Pope, 18, and dismissed similar charges against the Negro, Lawrence Curry, 23.

Birm, Ala.

The two were arrested last night following a fight which ensued after Pope asked Curry to move further toward the rear of the Market Street bus. Pope admitted today in court that he struck Curry during the altercation.

According to testimony, Curry took a seat near the back of the bus which was nearly filled. Mrs. Howard O'Kelley, a nurse sitting behind the Negro said she saw Pope leave his seat and ask Curry to move back and that she saw Curry then stand up and tell Pope, "I'm not moving back any further."

Mrs. O'Kelley said Curry then sat down and the two exchanged words. Later Pope got up again, she said, and struck the Negro.

Judge Graham said in fining Pope, "It wasn't up to him to ask him (Curry). It wasn't any of his business. If he wanted him to move he should have asked the bus driver."

After Shot Hits Negro Home

Atlanta Ga.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., June 3 (AP)—All available police were called out Sunday to prevent a possible clash between white and Negro crowds after a shooting incident which apparently began over a stray baseball.

Safety director David Garrison said that all appeared to be peaceful again Sunday night.

Three white men were jailed without charge after the incident in which a shotgun was fired into a Negro home. They were identified as George Cash, about 40, Horace Morelock, 55, and Andy Williams, 57.

Police Egt. Emory Jackson gave this account of the incident:

Whites and Negroes were playing baseball on adjoining diamonds at a nominally white playground near an indefinite line dividing white and Negro residential areas.

The players "appeared to be getting along fine" when two Negro boys scooped up a stray ball from the white game and ran to their home about two blocks away.

Several minutes later, the shotgun blast was fired from a moving auto into the home of Earlina Hill, where the two boys live.

Crowds of both whites and Negroes quickly formed in the neighborhood armed with clubs, rocks, sticks and other weapons, and police were called. An estimated 2,000 persons were involved.

All working officers were sent to the scene immediately and the Rev. Dewey Jackson, former police captain, pleaded with the demonstrators to disperse.

Jackson said the only casualty reported was a Negro woman who was treated for minor injuries at a hospital after being struck by a baseball bat.

Prom Mixed, But Negroes Shun Banquet

Constitution Fri. 5-18-56 Atlanta Ga.

OAK RIDGE, Tenn., May 17—(UP)—Fifteen Negro students at Oak Ridge's integrated high school declined today to attend a segregated banquet planned for them following an unsegregated junior-senior prom. P. 6

Parents of the predominately white juniors and seniors voted earlier to hold a separate banquet for the Negro students, although the dance tomorrow night will be integrated. There are about 685 white students in the two classes.

The Negro junior and seniors and their parents met at the old Scarborough Negro school. They resolved unanimously that "since the prom is to be an integrated affair, it would be against our principles to relegate ourselves to segregation in the name of Oak Ridge High School."

Dr. J. M. Schreyer, chairman of the school prom festival committee, explained his planning group was following the will of the majority, since the issue of segregation was put to the parents of the students.

Oak Ridge is the only integrated public high school in Tennessee.

Threats After His Bus Suit Leave Negro Unperturbed

Thurs. 6-7-56 Memphis Tenn.

By ROY JENNINGS

A Memphis postal clerk who has attacked the validity of state segregation laws on public transportation in a Federal Court lawsuit went about his chores unperturbed yesterday after claiming he received "more than 100" threatening telephone calls.

O. Z. Evers of 671 Lipford said he planned to complain about the calls to police but he didn't get around to it by last night.

Police Chief J. C. Macdonald, who was named a defendant in the suit along with two patrolmen, the city commissioners, Memphis Street Railway Co., and a coach operator, said Evers will receive the same protection any other Memphis citizen ordinarily receives.

Cross Burning Investigated

An investigation into the burning of a cross in front of Evers' home late Tuesday night has been launched, the police chief acknowledged. Any charges growing out of the incident would be of a disorderly conduct nature, he indicated.

Most of the anonymous callers "gave me a good cursing or threatened my life," said the 31-year-old distribution clerk for the Postal Transportation Service.

"One of the callers said he was head of the Ku Klux Klan and he was going to blow my head off. Others said they would be coming by my house."

Evers said the calls did not alter his stand on the lawsuit.

Legal Questions Arise

Several legal questions arose yesterday as attorneys began studying the case.

The absence of the state as a defendant in the case raised some legal eyebrows. It brought the explanation that either side or the court could ask that the state be made a party defendant in the suit.

Necessity of the state as a party in the case was pointed up after the city attorney's office reported local ordinances are free of Jim Crow provisions with the exception of a provision recognizing state laws and their enforcement as required by the state constitution.

Commercial Appeal

The city attorney's office and Memphis Street Railway indicated they will take no legal steps until they receive copies of the complaint and have had time to study it.

P. 2

No Appeal To State

The state attorney general's office at Nashville reported has received no request to take part in the proceedings.

In the suit carrying the blessings of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Evers urged the court to declare the state segregation laws unconstitutional. He claimed they are in violation of the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution guaranteeing certain rights.

The six sections of Title 65 of the Tennessee Code under fire were passed in 1905 and incorporated last year in the state code enacted by the 79th General Assembly.

Evers also asked for a speedy hearing by a three-judge court.

Three-judge courts are available for constitutional questions which haven't been decided previously. Judge Marion S. Boyd is expected to rule on the necessity of three judges to hear the case at the start of the trial.

Fall Trial Indicated

The judge's decision may be appealed directly to the United States Supreme Court. Five Negro students seeking admission to Memphis State College chose that alternative recently but the high court upheld the Memphis judge's ruling that two additional judges weren't needed.

A Federal Court observer estimated trial of the case will start no earlier than September.

The defendants have 20 days after they receive their summons to answer the charges of Evers. The summons haven't been delivered yet. Judge Boyd can grant unlimited extensions to parties needing more time to answer a complaint.

Judge Boyd's court calendar already is filled with cases through July 11 with several others ahead of Evers' suit still awaiting a trial setting.

It has been the policy of Judge Boyd to adjourn court during August.

Disabled veteran kicked off Southern train in Tennessee

Atlanta Constitution Sat. 4-23-55

CHICAGO—A disabled World War II veteran told NAACP officials here last week that he was kicked off the Southern Railroad's California Special at Harriman, Tenn., and then threatened by three policemen, one of whom threatened to "fill him full of lead."

Walter Williams, 35, told of his night of terror in which he was held in the Harriman jail overnight without food or water.

The war veteran's trouble began when he got into an argument with a conductor who was collecting tickets. His ticket, he said was in his overcoat pocket when the conductor began collecting tickets after a Knoxville Tenn., stop.

* * *

MR. WILLIAMS, in the smoker at the time, told the conductor he would get the ticket but the conductor started an argument. Williams asserted the conductor left and he thought the argument was ended until the conductor returned with police at Harriman, an unscheduled stop.

They threw his bag off the train and threatened to push him off, Mr. Williams said.

Mrs. Carolyn Young of Chicago and Mrs. Edna Crosley Brown of Cleveland delayed police long enough to get the veteran's name and address. Mrs. Young said the conductor threatened to put them off the train if they mentioned the incident during the rest of the trip.

* * *

MRS. YOUNG said none of the other passengers protested the removal of Mr. Williams. "They all said it's a shame," she related, but said "we live down here and we have to ride this train again'."

Mr. Williams boarded the train at Asheville, N.C., after leaving a veteran's rehabilitation center following an 18-month treatment for a tubercular infection received in the service.

He recently had eight ribs removed and uses a crutch. A native of Blocton, Ala., he attended high school in Chicago.

William H. Huff, chairman of the Chicago NAACP branch legal redress committee, said a suit will be filed against the railroad and the conductor, identified by Williams as C. L. Hickerson.

P. O. Clerk Tests Tenn. Bus Laws

Commercial Appeal P. 12

MEMPHIS, Tenn., 1— Postal clerk O. Z. Evers asked Federal Court to declare without a trial, that Tennessee's bus segregation laws are unconstitutional. P. 12-8-56

In his original complaint last summer, Evers charged his constitutional rights were violated when police told him to move to the rear of a city bus, get off or go to jail.

No date has been set for a trial, but Judge Marion Boyd was asked to hold a hearing on the motion on Dec. 14.

Co-ed Refuses to Ride Jim Crow; Faces Get Red...Nothing Happens

Courier Sat. 1-7-56 Pittsburgh Pa.

HOUSTON—Pert and pretty Gertrudejane Holliday, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Holliday of Houston, created a mild commotion for passengers and a "purple face situation" for a railroad conductor and a Lake Charles, La., police officer.

En route home from Fisk University, where she was recently chosen one of its most beautiful girls, Miss Holliday refused to enter a jim-crow coach upon reaching New Orleans, as ordered by the conductor.

The ired conductor notified the police and when the train reached Lake Charles, a police officer boarded the train and told her she was under arrest.

* * *

WHEN SHE ASKED what the charge would be and pointed out that she was an interstate passenger and the recent ICC decision, the officer was still going to take her into custody.

At that time two men, apparently railroad detectives, came up, called the conductor and officer aside and talked to them in hushed tones.

They flushed and left without saying another word to her. She was not molested any more all the way to Houston.

Two Texas Stations Oppose ICC Anti-Bias Movement

Daily World Fri. 1-13-56

HOUSTON, Tex.— (NNPA) — Although January 10 was the deadline for compliance with the Interstate Commerce ruling that racial discrimination of interstate railroad and bus passengers is unlawful, a survey here indicated that two bus terminals and two railroad stations here were not complying.

The Informer Newspapers, which made the survey, reported that the Jim Crow set up at both bus terminals here was intact. The manager said he could not comment.

The drinking fountain in the colored waiting rooms at both the Greyhound and Continental bus stations are placed between and men and women's toilets, and the odors can be smelled from either direction when drinking water.

The sign on the colored waiting room at the Greyhound bus station still says "Colored Waiting Room."

The sign on the colored waiting room at the Continental bus station says "Express."

A sizeable group of colored passengers boarded the Interstate bus going to New Orleans. There was a Navy man in the group. All took back seats on the bus.

The sign has been painted out at the Southern Pacific Station, the colored ticket window closed, the "Colored Entrance" painted over and Jim Crow coaches eliminated. All employees have been told to abide by the law. A colored man was served at the snack bar.

The "colored" sign at the Missouri Kansas and Texas Railroad Station is still up. The station master said he has recieved no word as to when the sign would be removed.

At the Union Station, the entrance used by colored people had a sign "Closed". Racial signs were removed more than a week ago. Most of the "For White" signs on doors are marked "Fresh Paint." Employees have been instructed to abide by the law.

Council Queries Shepperd On Replacing Of RR Station Signs

Informer Houston, Tex. Sat. 1-28-56 P. 20

MARSHALL— The Citizens Council has asked Attorney General John Ben Shepperd to issue an opinion stating who has the authority in Texas to order the signs "For Negroes" and "For Whites" placed back in the Texas and Pacific Railway station here. The city attorney and the railroad Commission of Texas have refused to accept responsibility for ordering the signs replaced.

The council has also made an appeal to Governor Shivers as to what they can do. The Harrison County Citizens Council wants Texas to follow in the steps of Louisiana and put the signs back, and also put police in the stations. So far Texas has not followed in the footsteps of Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Georgia and Virginia. Both the governor and the attorney general are likely to find the issue a hot potato. Federal law gives the Interstate Commerce Commission Jurisdiction over interstate travel, and no state has concurrent jurisdiction with the ICC.

It would seem that the only field left for Texas and the attorney general is in the intrastate travel. But the Citizens Councils don't want Negroes to sit in white waiting rooms, whether they are interstate or intrastate passengers. They know that if they can't segregate interstate passengers, then sooner or later segregation will break down for intrastate Negro passengers.

The Citizens Council appealed to William J Murray of the Texas Railroad Commission, but this gentleman denied that the Texas Commission had authority on interstate travel.

Then the Citizens Council appealed to the city commissioners to pass an ordinance ordering the signs back in the station. City Attorney Gaines Baldwin said that he doubted that the city had authority, and asked the council to make further inquiries.

The chairman of the City Commission said that the commissioners felt sympathetic with the Citizens Council and would meet next week for passing an ordinance, if the attorney general ruled that the City Commission had authority.

In the meantime W G Vollmer, president of the Texas and Pacific Railway, sent word to the Citizens Council that it was his wish that the City of Marshall not pass an ordinance calling for restoring the signs. He pointed out that Texas and Pacific Railway officials had been ordered by the ICC to remove the signs, and implied that a city ordinance to the contrary would involve the railroad in an embarrassing situation.

Just before press time City Attorney Baldwin said that he saw little hope for restoring the signs. Everything now is waiting upon Attorney General John Ben Shepperd's opinion as to whether anybody has authority in Texas to order the signs put back, so as to affect Negro interstate passengers. At press time no word had come through from Governor Shivers.

NAACP Petitions Austin City Council on Bus Incidents

Informer Sat. 2-25-56 P. 1 Houston, Tex.

AUSTIN— The Austin City Council was petitioned Thursday morning by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People who objects to the behavior of the local police department and transit company in connection with the arrest and jailing last year of Mrs Howellen Bunton Taylor, a young mother and former student of Huston-Tillotson College.

The petition, titled "Request for Issuance of a New Statement of Policy for the Austin Police Department and the Transit Company," was presented to the council by the Rev J L Dawson, vice-president of the local NAACP chapter. A large delegation of local citizens were present to witness the petitioning.

THE ENTIRE PETITION FOLLOWS

On November 16th, 1955 Mrs Howellen Bunton Taylor, a young mother and a former student of Huston-Tillotson College, boarded a bus at 19th and Harvey street. She was carrying her two-year-old baby. She placed the baby on the extreme front seat while she made change and paid her bus fare. The bus pulled off immediately causing her to sit beside the baby until she could put her change and transfer in her purse. The bus driver turned immediately and began telling her to move to the back seat. This angered Mrs Taylor and she refused to move to a rear seat.

The bus driver stopped at the next store and placed a call to the Austin Police Department and five cars answered the call. Mrs Taylor was removed from the bus around 10 a m and carried to the Police Court building at 7th and East avenue and placed in jail. Later during the same day, the bus driver came down and filed charges against her for "violating the Jim Crow Law."

Informer Sat. 2-25-56 p.10

Houston, Tex.

ber 17th a bond was posted for the release. Mrs Taylor was released after spending almost 16 hours in jail away from her young baby and family. Her case was appealed to the County Court at Law, after the City Judge found her guilty and assessed her fine at $28.00.

Previous to this incident Miss Georgia Johnson and a young companion were removed from the Austin Transit Company's bus at 8th and Congress avenue and charged with violation of the Jim Crow law in 1951, the case was appealed to the County Court at law by Attorney Harry Bellinger of San Antonio. The Bus company and the police Department failed to prosecute the case further. Their failure to do so, caused legal action to cease at this point.

On July 31st 1953 Mrs Myrtle Johnson was removed from the Austin Transit Company's bus by a policeman at the request of the bus driver at 5:30 p m while enroute to No 3 Green Lane in Enfield. She was detained at the City jail from 5:30 p m to 7: p m.

There were several other similar cases reported by the daily papers, but no formal protest was filed with the NAACP office in Austin.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

As recently as three of four weeks ago two Negro children and two white children between the ages of 10 and 12 who are attending an integrated school together at St Edwards, boarded the bus together at 6th and Congress Avenue. They were all seated on the front seat. The bus driver asked the two Negro kids to move to a back seat. They refused to do so as they didn't want to be separated from their classmates and friends. The bus driver then called a policeman, he boarded the bus and persuaded the two Negro kids to move to a rear seat. Here we contend is shown the persistent will of certain individuals to set themselves up as agents purportedly representing the law based upon an assumed existing law.

FINDINGS

On Monday evening at 1 p m Rev J L Dawson, Rev M L Cooper and Arthur De Witty held a conference with the County Attorney and inquired as to why the case was dismissed and not prosecuted. He said what is here in reported.

In Cause No 29048 brought by the City of Austin upon testimony of one bus driver and one policeman, Judge Daughtery proceeded to assume Mrs Taylor guilty and assessed her a heavy fine and remanded her to jail with much embarrassment and without benefit of a counsel to represent her.

In the County's Court at Law, in cause No-39348 Mrs Howellen Bunton Taylor was found not guilty as she had previously pleaded in Corporation Court. When the case was called up in the County Court, County Attorney, Tom Blackwelll filed a motion for dismissal on the basis of insufficient evidence based upon that principle of law enunciated in the May 17th 1954 Supreme Court decision in racial segregation. In effect, and for all practical purposes there was no valid Jim Crow left for Mrs Taylor to violate. His motion was sustained by Judge Mace Thurman and the case dismissed on January 4, 1956.

RECOMMENDATIONS

We take the position, as a results of the above observations. that it is the clear duty of this City Council, as the policy making body, to issue a new statement of policy to the Austin Transit Company and the Police Department, acting as agents in a governmental capacity, to cease the practice of further infringing upon the real and personal rights of passengers using such services offered by the Transit Company.

We further feel that the City Council retains certain proprietary rights, reserved unto itself in the granting of the operational franchise, to restrain the Bus company and the Police Department from serving as instruments to further damage the peace and dignity of the Citizens of the Austin Community by acting under cover of an invalid law.

We feel it imperative that the City Council join all other interested persons in a clarification of policy in the light of new and recent higher court principles.

Bus Segregation Abandoned In Dallas, Texas

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 4-26-56 p.1

DALLAS, Tex. — (INS) — Segregation will be abandoned immediately on all Dallas city buses.

The legal counsel of the local transit company announced Wednesday after studying the Supreme Court's decision that all segregation signs in the city buses would be removed Wednesday afternoon.

Texas Police Chief, VA Transit Co. Give Orders

Daily World p.1 Wed. 4-25-56

Atlanta, Ga.

DALLAS, Tex. — (INS) — Dallas police chief Carl Hanson Tuesday ordered his officers to refrain from enforcing segregation on city busses.

RICHMOND, Va. — (INS) — The Virginia Transit Company, which operates city buses in Richmond, Portsmouth and Norfolk, ordered an end to enforced segregation on its vehicles late Tuesday afternoon.

TEXAS ORDER

The police crief's order came in the wake of Monday's U. S. Supreme Court decision voiding state and local laws enforcing segregation of Negroes and whites on local and intrastate busses.

Meanwhile, officials of the Dallas Transit Company, operator of the city busses, said they were awaiting a complete report of the court's decision before changing operating policies.

A spokesman for the Company said driver of the busses will not be given any special instructions as to desegregation until after a study has been made of the Federal Courts ruling.

VIRGINIA ORDER

The order in compliance with the A. U. S. Supreme Court decision of May which held segregated seating arrangements in Columbna, S. C. unconstitutional, applies in all three cities where Virginia Transit operates.

Warren R. Pollard, President of the company, after a long conference with attorneys, announced the end of enforced segregation effective Wednesday morning. He said.

"Seating in buses will be left to discretion of passengers. It is hoped, however, that good judgment will be used by all passengers in order to continue to maintain good relations.

Pattern of seating on city buses in Richmond during the rush hour this evening appeared normal. Negroes by and large boarded buses and moved to the rear seats they have always occupied under Virginia State law.

Police in Richmond still had received no change of standing orders which require that they enforce the state's segregation law.

Court Blocks Signs Backing Segregation

Advertiser 10-11-56 Montgomery Ala.

DALLAS, Oct. 10 (AP)—Dist. Judge Dallas Blankenship yesterday dismissed a suit seeking to get the Dallas Transit Co. to reinstall its segregation signs.

After a 35-minute hearing Blankenship ruled that the two persons filing the suit did not have a "justifiable interest."

Austin E. Burges, secretary-treasurer of the Texas Citizens Council, and Miss Addie Barlow Frazer filed the suit last month.

They asked Judge Blankensrip to order the bus company to reinstall its "white" and "colored" signs.

MAYOR PRESENT

Mayor Robert L. Thornton of Dallas, City Manager Elgin Crull, City Secretary Harold Shank and all members of the City Council were at the hearing but took no part in it.

The suit was the result of a ruling the mayor and the City Council made in July. At that time, they were requested to make the transit company put its segregation signs back up. They answered that the matter had been ruled on by the courts and that even though there was some divergence of opinion over the ruling, they as laymen couldn't change it.

The signs came down last spring following a ruling by the U. S. Supreme Court that public transportation could no longer remain segregated.

Judge turns down request to reinstall jim-crow bus signs

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 10-20-56

DALLAS — District Judge Dallas Blankenship dismissed a suit seeking to get the Dallas Transit Co. to reinstall its "white" and "colored" signs on buses here last week.

After a 35-minute hearing, Judge Blankenship ruled that Austin E. Burges of the Texas Citizens Council, and Miss Addie Barlow Frazer had no "justifiable interest" in the suit.

The segregation signs came down last spring following a ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court that public transportation could no longer remain segregated.

Ruling On Houston Incident Significant

WICHITA FALLS — Another signal victory for the civil rights of Negroes was won here Tuesday when Federal Judge Joseph B Dooley entered an order against the Houston Belt & Terminal Company and in favor of Dr A E Roark of Wichita Falls, who had been assaulted by a policeman in the railway station of the said Houston Belt & Terminal Company on December 20, 1955, at Houston, while waiting for a train in the white waiting room in Houston.

The case aroused interest because Dr Roark was traveling from Wichita to Houston and back on a round-trip ticke, which is intrastate, or inside the state of Texas. The case was actually decided on October 31, when the court announced judgment from the bench against the Houston Belt & Terminal Company. The order was entered as of October 13. Sat. 11-24-56

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission had provided for no segregation in interstate or between-state travel, it had been insisted by the state authorities that travel inside the state was a matter strictly under the state segregation laws. Said segregation laws were interposed in the trial as a justification for the policeman who assaulted Dr Roark, but the judge nonetheless voted Dr Roark $500 damages and all costs. This means that even passengers traveling from place to place inside the state may now take their seats in the white waiting room without fear.

The ase was won by Attorney I H Spears, a seasoned lawyer who was practicing at the Tulsa bar when Wesley and Atkins had their firm in Muskogee. He is receiving acclaim from lawyers over the nation.

Richmond Changes Signs

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 10—The sign at one of the two waiting rooms in Richmond's Main Street station used to read "colored." Today it has "colored—intra-state passengers." The change was made, officials said, to comply with the I. C. C.'s order.

Med 1-11-56

At the Broad Street Station, all "white" and "colored" signs have been removed. All passengers using the station are presumed to be interstate passengers, officials said.

NORFOLK, Va. — The Greyhound bus station here at Brambleton Ave. and Granby St. is still using the signs on the inside: "To Colored Waiting Room."

Outside on the station, this sign: "Colored Waiting Room and Restaurant."

Wilbur Sudbrack, manager of the Greyhound Post House, a restaurant within the Greyhound station, directed colored customers to the jim-crow restaurant and declined to serve them at the main counter.

In a ruling on Dec. 19, the ICC ordered jim-crow signs down in railroads and bus stations in the South by Jan. 10, 1956.

Although there is a colored waiting room in the Norfolk Greyhound bus station, colored passengers who waited in the main waiting room were not annoyed Wednesday.

RICHMOND—The "White" and "Colored" signs in the Greyhound bus terminals appear to be falling throughout the State of Virginia.

Stations operating under the Richmond Greyhound Lines were ordered on Monday morning to remove the race signs.

Norfolk, Va.

A SPOKESMAN for the Atlantic Greyhound Lines, of Charleston, W. Va., told W. Lester Banks, Virginia executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, that undoubtedly that division would follow Richmond's lead.

A vice president in the Richmond office said that he ordered, by telephone, the removal of race signs from Greyhound stations in Richmond, Petersburg, Norfolk, Portsmouth and Newport News.

• • •

NO OFFICIAL statement had been received from the Atlantic Division by press time. The Atlantic Greyhound has jurisdiction over the Valley area of Virginia, including the cities of Roanoke, Lynchburg, Bristol and Harrisonburg.

The Guide was informed by M. D. Griffin, manager of the Norfolk Greyhound Terminal, that the race signs would be removed from the station "sometimes this week."

• • •

THE ORDER does not affect eating facilities in the terminals because they are operated by private owners. The rest rooms at the Norfolk terminal do not have race signs so no change will be necessary there.

L. C. Major, president of Richmond Greyhound Lines, could not be reached for further details on his order which knocks out another stumbling block to integration in travel in the South.

Victory smiles are flashed by principals in a test of Virginia's law requiring segregation on buses, in light of the refusal of the U. S. Supreme Court to upset a lower court ruling against segregation on city buses.

Mrs. Pearlie Vinson, of Portsmouth, center, was charged with disorderly conduct last Sept. 23 in Portsmouth Police Court, for refusing to move to the rear of a city bus there.

But on recommendation of Commonwealth's Attorney, the case against Mrs. Vinson was thrown out of court late last week because of the recent rulings.

NEGRO HOME DAMAGED BY BOMB THROWN IN YARD

. . . Police are shown inspecting the scene afterwards

Negro home here damaged by crude bomb

News P. 1 Fri. 4-27-56 B'ham, Ala.

Police today were investigating a bombing in which the home of John H. Sargent, a Negro substitute letter carrier, was damaged.

Sargent, his wife and their 5-year-old daughter were watching television in their home at 1215 11th-ct, n, when the explosion shattered several window panes and damaged Venetian blinds.

Three other persons were in another room of the house. None of the six were injured.

POLICE SAID the bomb fell in the yard about eight and a half feet from the house at about 10:30 last night. It excavated a hole about five inches deep and eight inches in diameter.

Acting Asst. Police Chief J. C. Lance and Lt. J. H. Wooley are directing the investigation. They said they found bits of paper which have been turned over to a laboratory for analysis. It will be two or three days before the analysis is completed, Lance said.

POLICE termed the bomb a homemade one and expressed a belief it was tossed in the yard by a passing automobile. The front porch lights of Sargent's home were on at the time.

Sargent, who had been living at the address about 10 months, said he had never been threatened.

SARGENT'S HOME WAS the scene of a cross burning three weeks ago. Police who investigated the burning of a small cross in front of his home said what appeared to be a bunch of firecrackers had been thrown into the yard of a home nearby occupied by an Italian family.

At that time, Sargent told police he believed the firecrackers probably were intended for his yard instead of the other family's.

Sargent's home is flanked by two white residents, Lance said. But they and other white persons in the area have sold their homes to Negroes, he added.

Another Outrageous Bombing

News P. 4 38c B'ham, Ala. Sat. 4-28-56

The bombing Thursday night in which a Negro substitute mail carrier's home on 11th Court, North, in the Smithfield-Fountain Heights area was damaged was another outrageous action of the kind the community cannot tolerate. The bomb, apparently a homemade device thrown from an automobile, exploded in the yard, shattering windows and Venetian blinds in the house. Fortunately, none of the six persons in the house at the time was injured.

The home is located between two homes occupied by white residents, but they and other white persons in the area are reported to have sold their houses to Negroes. A crude cross was recently burned in about the same spot but the Negro family is said to have had no trouble with white neighbors.

Frightfulness such as bombing is an intolerable defiance of law, decency and humanity, a blow at the security of us all. It is the work of a mad fanaticism which deeply menaces the whole community. In a time of troubled race relations it can only intensify tension. The utmost endeavors to find the guilty are obviously imperative in the common interest.

Cross Burning Follows Bombing Of Mail Man's Home

News P. 1 Sun. 3-8-56 B'ham, Ala.

Already with a week-old mysterious bombing of his home unsolved a postman and his wife, John H. and Mrs. Minnie Sargent, of 121 N. 11th Court, complained that they awakened early last Monday morning and found a large Ku Klux Klan-type cross burning in the front yard of their home, police said.

Sargeant said that just as he stepped out of the door en route to work, he saw the large blazing cross, which stood four feet high with a three-foot-wide cross-pole span.

Investigating officers, Patrolman Ray said that the cross was wrapped in an old piece of chenille bedspread which carried an odor of kerosene.

Police said they were still investigating the mysterious bombing of the sargeants' home Thursday night, April 26. They said that the blast, apparently caused by a single stick of dynamite, knocked all the window and door glass out in the front room.

Investigating officers quoted Sargent as saying that the blast occurred around 10:30 p. m., and that the bomb struck a window and fell into the yard before going off.

The postman said the bomb was thrown from a black Chevrolet car that sped up and left the scene quickly after the explosion.

He said that his home is located between two white families, an area which is slowly being converted into a so-called "Negro Neighborhood," as the white residents manage to sell their homes and move out.

Sargent reported that this was the second recent cross-burning at his home, first occurring about a month prior to the bombing and the recent incident. He said that he has been living in that house for the past 10 months without any previous trouble.

Man, Wife Escape Harm In "Bombing"

Daily World Tues. 7-3-56 Atlanta, Ga.

A man and his wife narrowly escaped inujry early Monday morning as the apartment they rented two days earlier from a white real estate company was dynamited, police reported.

The victim's were identified as Carl Haynes, 23, and his wife, Mrs. Sally Haynes, of 501 Rankin St. N. E.

The Rankin Street dwelling, located in an all white neighborhood just one block from other Negro homes on Angier Ave., suffered heavy damage to the porch and walls of the two front rooms, reports indicated.

The blast occurred around 4:15 a. m. less than an hour after the couple reached home.

Mrs. Haynes said she and her husband moved into the house Saturday after renting it from Rooker Real Estate Co., for $42.50. They had retired when glass and debris from the explosion fell in on them, she said.

Haynes said he worked late Sunday night. His wife had been visiting with his mother at a Lamar Street S. E. address.

After the explosion, the couple said they ran several blocks to Haynes brother's house on Parkway Drive from where they called police.

Ptl. R. G. Cantrell and G. T. Bennett, investigating officers, said they found electronic wire "leading from the point of the blast to be next to the side of the house." They said this apparently was used to set off the explosion.

A house next door, occupied by a white family, had six of its windows shattered by the blast. The victim, Mrs. Dennis George, 505 Rankin St., N. E., was quoted by police as saying she was called after the explosion and told she would be bombed out. She said they were told they could move in immediately. The young couple had been renting a room on the Westside before finding this apartment.

The real estate company refunded the rent money Monday. Meanwhile the family is residing with relatives.

MOBILE, Ala—"Ever since the first brick was thrown Sept. 5, I've had men watching Gulley's (Booker T.) house. I told the patrol cars and patrolmen to check it periodically."

Thus spoke Police Chief Dudley McMayden, as he announced that he had ordered "a complete investigation" of the month-long campaign of terror against Mr. Gulley, 37-year-old mechanic.

BUT NO PATROLMEN saw the person or persons who fired three shotgun blasts into the Gulley home Tuesday night, those who set fire to it Wednesday night, nor those who tossed bricks through the windows on alternate nights since Sep 5.

Mr. Gulley and his wife and three children ranging in age from 13 to 3 moved into the house in an otherwise all-white block on Sept 4. They had been receiving threatening telephone calls ever since.

Post 10-6-56

"I MOVED MY FAMILY out after the shotgun blasts," Mr. Gulley told reporters, adding: "Whoever did this to me had already won. Why did they have to fire the place?

"All I can do now is sell what is left and get out."

Meanwhile, in Cleveland, Mr. and Mrs. James Jones, who recently purchased a home in a predominantly white neighborhood, on Cleveland's East Side, refused to be intimidated by hoodlums.

They reported to police that a brick with a note attached telling them to "Get out, you n—s. We don't want you here—or else"—was thrown through their front window Thursday.

Mr. Jones, 39, his wife, 38, and their 21-year-old daughter were awakened by the crash. Mrs. Jones said the family was frightened by the incident but is making no plans to move. They moved into the house last Sunday.

IN SAN FRANCISCO, Mrs. Lillian Byrd, 41, wife of an aircraft mechanic, denied telling police that a cross was burned across the street from their new home in Hayward.

Mrs. Byrd, who lives at 2509 MacFarlane, La., said she reported a fire but not the burning of a cross Tuesday night. "It could have been paper, cardboard or anything. I didn't say it was a cross," she declared.

The report of the alleged cross burning resulted in an immediate investigation by Hayward police and Raymond Frost of 2434 MacFarlane La., junior high school teacher, called a neighborhood meeting.

"We want to clear the neighborhood's name. We don't want the stigma of prejudice here," Mr. Frost declared.

ALSO IN SAN FRANCISCO, hoodlums burned a cross in front of the home of Herman Browne, 35, a radio mechanic and father of three children, then smashed the front window with a rock with a "get out" note tied to it.

Mr. Browne, who owns his home in the predominantly white neighborhood and has lived there for the past four years without incident, told police the crime was committed as he watched a boxing match on television.

"I don't know who did it, he said. Maybe it's because of all this trouble down South."

While the culprits "couldn't be found" in the South, in New York City a 25-year-old plasterer's helper was convicted of inducing three boys to break windows in the home of a colored family in a "white" neighborhood in the Bronx.

* * *

THE MAN, WILLIAM PIZZOLONGO, was found guilty in Bronx Special Sessions Court Tuesday and is to be sentenced Oct. 15. The boys stoned and broke windows in the home of Percy Hill last May.

Also down in Mobile, Ala., police were under orders from the city commission to enforce city ordinances banning cross burnings following the second such incident stemming from an integration plea.

Target of the burnings were Mrs. Dorothy D. DaPonte, who sought to have her colored adopted daughter admitted to a "white" school, and Miss Mildred J. Laurendine, a friend of Mrs. DaPonte's.

* * *

INTIMIDATION ATTEMPTS also continued in Clinton, Tenn., where a dynamite explosion rocked the colored community in an effort to break down the will of colored parents of children in integrated Clinton High School.

Sheriff Glad Woodward said he feared that the blasts, which caused little damage, were part of a "continuing series" of anti-colored incidents that reached a climax in rioting some weeks ago.

Mobile Suburb Set To Block Negro Homes

MOBILE, (Ala., Oct. 9 (AP)—The Toulminville Property Owners Assn. disclosed today it has been organized to oppose the movement of Negroes into white residential sections of that suburb of Mobile.

A house acquired by a Negro family in a white section there was damaged by fire Sept. 26, the night after three shotgun charges were fired into it. p. 1

In another incident, a cross was burned last week in front of a house purchased by another Negro family on an all-white street.

USE EVERY METHOD

J W. Eberlein, president of the property owners' association, said the group "will use all conceivable legal and peaceful means at our command in united resistance against the efforts of any party or parties to change this community from a white to Negro residential area."

He said the association now has 60 members.

Eberlein added that it was organized "for the purpose of maintaining and protecting the property value of the individual homeowners and public property of this community. We are banded together in this endeavor."

He wrote the Mobile Real Estate Assn. that the association recognizes that some housing provision "must be made for the Negroes being moved out of the 18-block area in the Beauregard-Broad Street area, but certainly not at the expense of the white residents of Toulminville."

The area ias being razed in a slum clearance project. The Mobile Housing Board plans to build a 407-unit, low-rent housing project nearby.

Eberlein said the responsibility for relocating families displaced by the slums project lies with the real estate association and the housing board.

Gunfire Hits Negro's Home

MOBILE, Ala. —(AP)— Three shotgun charges were fired into a house recently purchased by a Negro in a white neighborhood.

Police said the charges peppered the kitchen wall of the home of Booker T. Gulley, Negro employe of a city bus line, and smashed a ceiling light. p. 7 A Gulley's wife, their five children and two cousins were seated in the living room at the time. They were unhurt.

FIRE-SCARRED HOME

Negro Moves Possessions From Mobile White Section

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Fri. 9-28-56

MOBILE, Ala., Sept. 27 (AP)—A Negro faminly moved their possessions from their fire-scarred home in a white section today.

Booker T. Gulley, 37-year-old mechanic for a bus line, said his family would not go back. "I'm afraid for my children," he said. He has five. p. 2-A

A fire burned the rear of the house last night, destroying a bedroom and damaging a kitchen and a bedroom.

Officers said the blaze, which started under the floor, apparently was the work of an arsonist. A charred nail keg found under the house was being studied by officers.

The house was struck by three charges from a shotgun the night before and Gulley said bricks had been thrown through windows numerous times since the family moved in Sept. 4.

The Gulleys moved in with relatives yesterday after the shooting. They were not in the house at the time of the fire.

"I guess I'll try to sell what's left of it," Gulley said. He said he had the house insured for $6,500 and its contents for $1,000.

Gulley told reporters he bought the house through a Negro real estate company. He quoted the agent as saying "the white people were going to move out of the section and the colored people move in." He purchased it for $7,500 and made a $2,000 down payment.

The house in suburban Toulminville formerly was occupied by a white family. About 10 other white families live on the block. The street is about a block and a half from the edge of a Negro residential section.

Gulle, said he has been trying to sell the place since the start of the brick throwing.

Police Commissioner Charles Hackmeyer called for an intense investigation of the case.

"We will not tolerate violence or destruction of property," he said. "That's going too far."

Detective Capt. Talley Rollings said detectives checked the Gulley house just 20 minutes before the fire was discovered. He added that patrolmen and detectives vhae been making hourly checks in the neighborhood.

Fri. 9-28-56

MOBILE, Ala., Sept. 27 (AP) A Negro's home in a white section was badly burned last night, less than 24 hours after the house was peppered by three shotgun blasts.

Fire Inspector J. B. Foster said it apparently was arson.

A burned portion of a nail keg was being checked to determine whether it contained anything inflammable. An officer who found it under a rear bedroom said he thought it had held kerosene.

Booker T. Gulley, 37, said windows had been smashed frequently by bricks and he had received threatening telephone calls since moving into the house Sept. 4.

After shotgun charges were fired into the house Tuesday night, he took his wife and five children to stay with a brother in nearby Prichard.

Gulley said yesterday he was moving out as soon as he could sell the house and find another place.

He said he used all his money as a down payment for the $7500 home after a Negro real estate agent told him "the white people were going to move out (of the section) and the colored people move in."

The block, in suburban Toulminville, has about 10 white families. It is about a block and a half from the outskirts of a Negro residential section.

Brick With Note Hurled Through Home Window

Fri. 9-28-56

CLEVELAND, Sept. 27 (AP) A Negro family that recently purchased a home in a predominately white neighborhood on Cleveland's east side reported to police that a brick with a note attached, telling them to get out, was thrown through their front window early today.

James Jones, 39, said he, his wife and 21-year-old daughter were awakened by the crash.

Police said the note was printed in neatly blocked letters on white paper and read:

"Get out. Get out, you niggers. We don't want you here—or else."

Jones' wife, Mattie, 38, said the family was frightened by the incident, but is making no plans to move. They moved into the house last Sunday.

The Bombing Pastime Again

Daily Worker

The bombing of the home of a citizen on last Saturday night has been followed by still another at the same place on Wednesday night.

Atlanta, Ga.

There is no greater peril to human safety and personal enjoyment of those rights enjoined upon a free people under a free government and a free society than that of an individual who cannot lie down peacefully in his bed, under his own roof with the assurance that he will rise unharmed the next morning.

Surely there is no place in our social agenda for the bomber, such as occasionally shows his ugly form among those whom his cowardice suggests violence by dark in the planting of a bomb in the path of an innocent dweller who feels that above all he has a legitimate right under his own vine and figtree.

For a number of years this bombing pastime has menaced our people. For the most it has gone on unmolested in its wilful outrage on society.

Ind. 3-2-56

Back in the old days of the Columbians, which preyed upon the security of the people of this city in broad daylight, we saw what lives even to this day, the ruthless visitation of such acts The city's good name and the prestige of the community were not enhanced in this ugly and cowardly practice.

We again appeal to the civil authorities for a vigorous thrust in the line of ridding the community of the bomber, whose prey is the innocent and the law-abiding.

Such practices passed up so lightly is an encouragement to those who seek such cowardly means as imperiling the homes and lives of those who would become home owners.

The bombing on last Saturday night of the home of Jewell Stewart should be vigorously probed. The repetition on last (Wednesday) night suggests that others still might be on the bombing agenda. With a more vigilance on the part of law enforcement officials the blame might be fixed and the practice curtailed.

Surely in such a scarcity of homes and the heavy demand of material which is hard to get for the processing of homes, we have no houses to spare to the arson minded.

Bombing must cease. The apprehension and conviction of one would check this practice if not stop it completely.

Night-Time Cowards

World P.8

Night-time cowards who throw bombs at the homes of peaceful, law-abiding, friendly citizens are on the loose again in Birmingham. Thursday night, April 26, the occupied home of a family was damaged by thrown dynamite.

Ind. 5-4-56

Birm, Ala.

Law enforcement continues to be challenged in such shameful and despicable acts. The dynamite throwers seem to stay out of the catch of the law. Yet the situation must not be viewed as beyond solution. It is always encouraging to believe that law enforcement is trying hard to apprehend and bring to bar violators.

Pattern of this latest bombing is similar to those unsolved racial b[illegible] which qlagued our city about seven years ago. Public o[illegible]on was firmly against those acts of violence at that time, as it is today.

The air needs to be cleansed of those things which might give the unstable, the misguided, the frustrated, and the ill-minded a sense of evil escape. Man's faith needs to be bolstered by a feeling of strength in goodness. This is the challenge to all who believe in fair play and the American way.

Action is needed from every effective level of crime detection and law enforcement to clear up this and other rocial and unlawful home bombings. Bomb action of this time is no less than atomic-age mob action, it seems to us.

Detectives Call Bomb 'Crude,' No One Hurt

P.2

Four detectives were assigned yesterday to push an investigation of the bombing of a Negro home Thursday night.

What detectives called a "crude bomb" was tossed into the yard of John H. Sargent, 26, Negro mail carrier, who lives at 1215 11th-ct, n between two white families.

The area lies on the fringe of one of the largest Negro residential sections of the city.

Many bombings and arson attempts have taken place in the general area during the past 10 years, since expansion of the Negro section has encroached on formerly white residential sections.

Dets. M. A. Jones, J. W. Jones, J. K. Parmley and C. M. Ray have been assigned to the bombing, which occurred at 10:30 p.m. while Sargent and five other persons watched television in the front room.

Sargent said the bomb struck against a window of the house and fell back into the yard.

Windows and door glass were shattered by the blast. The living room was littered with glass fragments but none was hurt.

Sargent said that a cross was burned in his front yard three weeks ago.

He said he had not been threatened, however, and declared there was no friction between his family and his white neighbors.

Sargent said his wife saw the car from which the bomb was thrown. She said it was a black Chevrolet.

Bits of paper found in the small crater left in the yard by the bomb were sent to the laboratory for examination.

Negro, Home Shot Up, Will Sell Out, Move

Post Herald

MOBILE, Sept. 26 (AP)—A Negro mechanic whose new home in a white section was shot up last night said today he is moving as quickly as he can sell out and find another place.

Three shotgun charges were fired at the modest home of Booker T. Gulley, 37, in the Toulminville section. Buckshot pierced the rear wall of the five-room frame house and smashed a ceiling light in the kitchen.

Gulley, his wife, their five children and a cousin were in another room watching television. They were not hurt.

Birmingham Ala.

Gulley, who is employed as a night mechanic by a busline, told reporters the shooting was not the first incident since the family moved into the house Sept. 4.

He said windows had been smashed frequently and he had received threatening telephone calls.

Thurs. 9-27-56

"I would move now if I had a place to move to and something to move on," he said. "This thing has made my wife a nervous wreck."

Gulley said he had to sell his previous home because it is on the site of a proposed housing project. He bought the Toulminville place through a Negro real estate company for $7,500 and gave a down payment of $2000 in cash.

"It was every bit of money I had and I can't move until I get some money," he added.

Gulley said the Negro real estate agent told him the house formerly was occupied by a white family. "She told me that the white people were going to move out (of the section) and the colored people move in."

About 10 white families live on the block, which is about a block and a half from the outskirts of a Negro residential section.

After the brick throwing started, Gulley continued, "I tried to sell the house back to the company I bought it from, but they wouldn't take it. Then I tried to trade it for another house, but they wouldn't do that either."

Thurs. 9-27-56

Detective Capt. Talley Rollings said police are patrolling the neighborhood almost constantly but have not been able to catch any of the vandals yet. The house adjoins a vacant lot and has thickets in back through which the vandals flee, he said.

The Toulminville area is on Mobile's northwestern city limits and adjoins the city of Prichard, which also had a shooting incident recently.

Three shots were fired Sept. 7 into the Prichard home of the Rev. Joshua Barney, 68, first Negro ever to qualify as a candidate for the city council here.

Eighteen white candidates also ran for the five council posts. Barney finished 16th in the Sept. 17 election.

Rezone Residential Area To Business Use Over Protests

World Birmingham Ala. P. 7

Wed. 9-12-56

BESSEMER, Ala (SNS) — Over the rugged objections of Atty. David H. Hood Jr., representing a group of property owners and other citizens, the Planning and Zoning Commission Sept. 4, recommended the rezoning of an area from property from residential to business.

Six of the nine commissioners were present and vote unanimously to make the change. There are no Negro persons on the commission.

The petitioners were represented by Atty. Howard McEniry who stated that the rezoned section would be used for erection of a motel. He contended that this construction would enhance the property value in the area.

Protesting against the proposed rezoning change were more than 50 property owners of 9th Avenue located between 17th Street and 13th Street, Bessemer.

The contested area is located on Ninth Avenue from the railroad crossing and is described as virtually unimproved.

Atty. Hood argued that the commission made an informal agreement at a protest conference some months ago not to rezone this contested area as long as it was desired as a residential section. But this version was disputed by spokesmen for the commission.

Commission members listed as present were Levi Becker, manager of the Bessemer Pizitz Store, president of the board; Herb Kaiser, Jesse Lanier, president of the Bessemer City Commission; Charlie Hawkins, attorney; Pete Walls, TC Employee and Atty. Lee Bains, acting secretary of the commission.

Burning of cross before Negro home here investigated

Wed. 10-11-56

Birmingham Ala.

Police today were investigating the burning of a three or four foot cross last night in front of a Negro family's home in Elyton.

OFFICERS J. E. PORTERA and J. C. Pierce said they were called to the home of Earnest and Helen Williams, 4 A Fourther, n, about 11 p.m.

The cross was completely burned to the ground when the officers arrived at the scene.

Sgt. R. T. Ponder said the act was probably "that of some teenage pranksters."

However, an investigation into the matter will be held, police said.

THE CROSS was made of small boards, approximately 4 inches wide, wrapped with paper and rags. No sign of gasoline or any other flammable fuel could be found.

The Williams' home is across the street from the white Elyton Village apartment courts.

Friends unit scores housing segregation

Afro-American 1-19

Baltimore Md.

PHILADELPHIA — American discrimination in housing and race is "one of the most glaring liabilities delaying our goal of equal opportunity," the American Friends Service Committee says in a pamphlet released Jan. 5.

"In this area Americans practice poorly their democratic beliefs," the Quaker organization reports in the 16-page illustrated publication entitled "They Say That You Say," and subtitled, "The Challenge of Houses and Race."

The pamphlet was prepared by the committee's Community Relations Program and is its first publication on race relations in housing.

DISCRIMINATORY patterns in housing is a major weakness of American communities because in too many cases "a few speak for many," the Committee says, adding, among those who help strengthen barriers are real estate men or neighbors.

One reason for the lag in housing is that "myth is accepted for fact and custom for right," the Committee says. The following facts are listed to explode myths:

* * *

1. SCIENTIFIC STUDIES prove that property values do not necessarily go down when the racial composition of a neighborhood changes.

2. If present residents of a neighborhood behave normally and stay put, the neighborhood cannot change radically.

3. Minority group members do keep up their property and sometimes do a better job than the former owners.

4. Minority group members have buying power and are as good credit risks as anyone else.

5. There is not cause for alarm if social relationships in a mixed neighborhood are considered on the same basis as those in a less diversified neighborhood.

6. Integrated neighborhoods need not lose prestige.

THE PAMPHLET has answers for these questions: What is a good neighborhood? Where does your neighborhood fall short of the goal?

Why does you neighborhood fall short? What can you do to make your neighborhood better? Where can you go for information and help?

BLYTHEVILLE, Ark., March 21.—Location of a grocery, designed to cater to Negro trade in a white residential area, has been denied by the City Council.

Fred Faught of Blytheville was denied the permit after a petition had been presented by white residents. The building, located in South Blytheville, is at the dividing line of white-Negro residential area, Bill Steinsiek, attorney representing the petitioners, said.

Relations Have Been Good

"Relations between the two races have been good in the area," Mr. Steinsiek told the council. "These petitioners want to keep it that way."

Mr. Faught had asked that he be allowed to open a grocery store on Clark Street. Residents said Mr. Faught plans to open a fish market in connection with the grocery.

Majority of persons in the area purchasing fish would be Negroes, Mr. Steinsiek said. Mr. Faught has not denied to the council the planned addition of a fish market.

Petitioners also charged that unsanitary conditions, including lack of proper plumbing, were present in the building. The house has also been termed a "fire hazard" by local residents.

Mr. Faught formerly ran a grocery store at the Blytheville Air Force Base. He moved the grocery supplies and other equipment to the South Blytheville home last year.

Zoning Law Needed

"We need a specific law governing zoning conditions," Kemper Bruton, alderman, said. "Such cases as Mr. Faught's are continually putting the council on a hot seat."

The ordinance states that persons wishing to protest a new business must file a petition within 30 days after a permit application has been made. A public hearing must then be called by the city.

"The fallacy of the ordinance is, it doesn't tell us what to do after we've called a hearing," Mr. Bruton said.

Mr. Faught now can take the case to court. If he does, the suit would be heard in Chancery Court.

Cross Burned, Note Tells Negro Family to Move

Post Times Herald Wash. Sept 28-56

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 27 (AP)—A cross was burned last night in front of a Negro home and a rock with a get-out message tied to it smashed the family's living room window.

Herman Browne, 35, a radio repairman and father of three children, told police the incidents took place as he was watching a boxing match on television.

Browne owns his own home in a predominantly white neighborhood. He said he had lived there four years with no trouble.

"I don't know who did it," he said. "Maybe it's because of all this trouble down South."

Racial 'Covenant' On Nixon's Home Injected In Politics

Post Herald Birmingham, Ala.

BY DICK PRESTON
Scripps-Howard Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2—Efforts are being made again in this campaign to make political capital of the "restrictive covenant" on the home owned by Vice President Richard M. Nixon.

Here are the facts:

Wed. 10-3-53

1. Such a covenant was signed by Nixon when he bought his $41,000 home here several years ago.

38c

2. The same agreement was signed by Sen. Estes Kefauver, the Democratic vice presidential candidate. Kefauver lives just around the corner from Nixon in suburban Spring Valley.

P. 2.

3. The Supreme Court has ruled that such covenants are legal vountary agreements, but cannot be enforced in the courts.

The agreements signed by Nixon and Kefauver state that their homes shall never "be used, or occupied by, or sold . . . or rented to Negroes . . . or to any person of the Semitic race."

They define Semites as including "Armenians, Jews, Hebrews, Persians and Syrians."

The agreement make an exception for "partial occupancy of the premises by domestic servants."

Nixon and Kefauver also bound themselves not to turn their homes into a "place of public entertainment . . . boarding house . . . tavern, dance hall or other resort."

Another clause in the agreements says the W. C. & A. N. Miller Co., which controls the suburb must approve in writing any purchaser or rentor.

This is an attempt to continue the restrictive feature despite court rulings outlawing covenants aimed at Negroes or Jews.

The Supreme Court in 1948 ruled that covenants could not be enforced against Negroes or Jews who move into a restricted area. In 1953, it ruled that sellers in such cases could not be sued for damages.

Since then, racial and religious barriers have broken down in many formerly restricted areas. However, a Miller Co. official said the covenants still are being honored voluntarily in Spring Valley.

Some newspapers printed stories about Nixon's covenant in 1952. At that time Murray Chotiner, his campaign manager, pointed out that Sen. John Sparkman, his opposite number in the 1952 vice presidential race, also lived in Spring Valley.

"Those great exponents of liberalism all signed similar covenants in the same Spring Valley tract," Chotiner said of Sparkman, Kefauver and the late Sen. Blair Moody (D., Mich.).

Windows Of Three Rooms Are Shattered By Gunfire

Daily World Sun. 7-15-56 P. 1

PENSACOLA, Fla. — (INS) — Eight persons were being questioned Saturday at Pensacola in the shooting up of the residence of a Negro physician in the "Fringe" area between white and Negro sections.

Detective Captain Raymond Harper said both Negroes and whites were among those questioned.

Windows of the three rooms of the home of Dr. Charles A. Augustus were broken by gunfire early Friday.

Atlanta, Ga.

There were no injuries, although 10 bullets or shotgun pellets were found in the bed room where the 29 year old general practitioner's two children slept.

Neither the children, two-year-old Karen and seven-months-old Vickie, nor their parents awoke.

Capt. Harper said it has been established that both a 16 gauge shotgun and a .22 caliber rifle were used. The picture window of the living room, the windows of the children's bedroom and the window of an unoccupied guest room were broken.

The family, which moved to Pensacola about three years ago, moved into their present nine-room home in September 1954.

Some houses on the block were occupied by whites and some by Negroes. Augustus said they had never received any sort of threat prior to the shooting.

His wife said, "since we have never had any trouble, and no one has ever said anything to us about moving here, we think it is probably a result of general racial feeling. May be resentment has built up for quite a while."

She said that there had been some feeling in Pensacola about a petition from one group of Negroes urging an end to school segregation but neither she nor her husband signed that.

Physician's Home Fired Upon In Florida Town

PENSACOLA, Fla. — (INS) — Eight persons were being questioned at Pensacola in the shooting up of the residence of a Negro physician in the "fringe" area between white and Negro sections.

Shots Spray Physician's Property

Defender Sat. 1-28-56 P. 1 Chicago, Ill.

PENSACOLA, Fla. — (INS) — A Negro family, whose Pensacola home was riddled by gunfire while they slept, blamed the shooting on "general racial feelings."

The shots, fired sometime during the darkness last Friday, broke window glass in three rooms, including a bedroom where two children were asleep.

No one was injured, nor did the shots awaken the family of Dr. Charles A. Augustus.

The Augustus home, a nine-room ranch-type brick structure, is in a "fringe" neighborhood where some residences are occupied by Negroes and some by whites.

Mrs. Augustus said,

"Since we have never had any trouble, and no one has ever said anything to us about moving here, we think it is probably a result of general racial feeling. Maybe resentment has built up for quite a while."

The 29-year-old general practitioner, a native of Oklahoma, and his wife, who is from Washington, D. C., moved to Pensacola about three years ago, and moved into their present home in September, 1954.

The shooting, which Detective Capt. Raymond Harper thinks was done from a car, broke window glass of a bedroom in which the doctor's children, two-year-old Karen and Vickie, age seven months, were asleep.

The picture window of the living room also was shattered and one pellet punctured the window of an unoccupied guest room.

Negro Home Blasted In Florida; 1 Killed

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla., ~~May 17.~~ — A Negro home was dynamited early today, killing a 45-year-old woman and injuring one other person while the seven residents of the building were asleep.

New York

Police said that May Hester was killed by the blast.

Police Chief H. Leroy Allen said the explosion apparently was intended "personally" for the victim.

"There appears to be no racial intent in this case," said Chief Allen. "It is strictly a personal type thing."

He said several suspects were being questioned.

Fla. trial October 17

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The trial of 22 of the leaders of the four-month-old bus boycott on charges of violating a city ordinance against transporting walkers to various destinations will open Wednesday, Oct. 17, the AFRO ascertained Saturday.

Ten of those facing trial are members of the executive board of the Inter-Civic Council, which has been spearheading the movement to wipe out segregation on the city bus line.

Afro-American

The other 12 include operators of the car pool and gas station managers who have supplied the 60-vehicle organization with the materials necessary to maintain the pool, which has enabled the bus protest movement to continue.

Sat. 10-20-56

WEDNESDAY, City Judge John Rudd tossed out as "irrelevant" a motion for quashing the charges against the 22 filed by Theries Lindsay and Francisco A. Rodriques, Tampa lawyer who was assigned to the case by the NAACP.

The city of Tallahassee has retained a nationally famous attorney, Mark R. Hawes, also of Tampa, for a $4,000 fee, to assist City Attorney Edward Hill in prosecuting the case against the 22.

* * *

THE DISMISSAL motion snubbed by Judge Rudd cited:

1. That the defendants are not engaged in a business activity but in a protest movement.
2. That the right of free speech cannot be licensed by public authority.
3. That the requirement of racial segregation is a bill of attainder.
4. That the action of the city denies equal protection of the law.

* * *

THE CITY apparently is resting its whole hope of breaking the boycott on the case against the leaders.

Members of the ICC disclosed to the AFRO that the campaign of harassment by city police of car pool drivers has slackened and that with the exception of buses still rolling around without colored patrons, the situation in the city is "normal."

Petition to force Negroes to move is turned down

News P. 19 Fri. 9-21-56 Orlando, Fla.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Sept. 21—(AP)—A group of Jacksonville residents protesting that two Negro families moved into a white neighborhood were told that the city commission can do nothing about it.

A group headed by Mrs. Virgil L. Lynn presented the commission a protest petition with 38 signatures. It asked that the Negroes be forced to move.

William M. Madison, city attorney, told the group yesterday the city "has no power, by zoning, to designate where white or Negro people may live.

"The city is entirely powerless to govern the location of the races," Madison said. "A deed restriction which limits occupancy of a property to any one race of people has been held null and void by the courts."

The delegation then filed from the room.

Delray Moves to Exclude

Mayor Says Step Needed to Keep Tourists Coming

By RUSS MARCHNER
Herald Staff Writer

DELRAY BEACH — The City Commission moved Tuesday to exclude the entire Negro area from the city limits in the latest of unprecedented maneuvers to combat the race problem here.

In a resolution adopted at an emergency session, the Commission "in order to preserve the health, safety and general welfare of the community, will cause to be passed special legislation redefining the municipal boundaries..."

Stressing the importance of all possible speed, the Commission directed City Attorney John H. Adams and special counsel John Moore "to take all necessary and required steps incident" to having a state act passed which would exclude the Negro poplulation of about 3,000 from the city.

The area to be excluded under the special act includes approximately one-third of the population of this Gold Coast town and would make a hole in the map of the town of about four square miles.

Following 11 days of relative quiet after the passage of the search and seizure ordinance of May 25, the latest move arising out of Negro use of the municipal beach came after "many conferences with both Negroes and whites," according to Mayor Mike Yargates.

Yargates, who said he was speaking for the Commission, commented, "I sincerely believe that this is the only way we can save Delray Beach.

"To keep the tourists coming down here we are forced to do something," he said. "Tourism is our whole livelihood."

Yargates continued: "The exclusion act will benefit all the people of Delray Beach. If the prosperity of Delray Beach is hurt, both white and black will go down together."

Commissioner Catherine Strong provided the lone dissenting vote as the resolution was passed in less than three minutes.

Mrs. Strong's statement "that all races were welcome to use the beach" in a federal court three weeks ago touched off the racial tension here. A week later, after a near-race riot on the beach, the city ordered Negroes segregated from the municipal beach and pool.

The search and seizure act which followed was employed by police once, May 27, as 30 assorted weapons were confiscated from cars entering the mile-long beach area.

Mrs. Strong prefaced her negative vote with "I don't think this is going to solve the problem. The public hasn't had a chance to express itself on this exclusion and I don't care for this manner of cramming it through." Herald

Mrs. Strong then shouted "no" and did not sign the resolution.

Attorney Moore, former FBI agent for four years, told Mrs. Strong that the exclusion act must by law be presented for voter approval in a referendum once it passes the state Legislature.

Moore later told The Herald that the exclusion is the first of two steps. P.2-A

"The second will be to form a beach association such as is done in some places in the North. The beach would be limited to the use of the citizens of the city and their guests."

Following the session, Yargates, who said he was going to Tallahassee Wednesday on business regarding the act, released for the first time a petition, dated May 26, from the Delray Beach Civic League, a Negro group.

The petition was signed by seven league members, several of whom brought the original suit in federal court, West Palm Beach, for use of the beach. It was an "alternative proposal which we feel would be acceptable to the Negro citizens."

It said a beach at least 500 feet long between the limits of the city and Boca Raton would be acceptable. "If the city is unable to purchase a beach site immediately we demand that they lease land and make same available for use until purchase can be negotiated."

In regard to the petition, Yargates said, "it is unbelievable what we have done to get that beach. We priced beach frontage as far south as Boca Raton," a distance of eight miles.

The Commission in answering the petitioners, indicated that "we have been working to procure a beach" and that plans for a Negro swimming pool "have just been received from the State Board of Health with their approval."

Commissioner W. J. Snow, who moved passage of Tuesday's ordinance, said "we've taken the lesser of two evils." Commissioner E. J. Barrow, who seconded the move, agreed with Snow.

CITY CANNOT SEGREGATE, ATTORNEY SAYS

P. 3 Herald

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — (ANP) — Up in air, and seeking protest petitions to oust two Negro families from a white neighborhood, a group of segregationists were told last week that the "city is entirely powerless to govern the location of the races."

Wed 6-26-56

The whites, headed by Mrs. Virgil L. Lynn, presented the city commission with a 38-signature petition asking them to force two Negro families to move from an all-white neighborhood they recently moved into.

City Attorney William M. Madison told the group the city "has no power, by zoning, to designate where white or Negro people may live." He said the "city is entirely powerless to govern the location of the races," he said.

Suit Here Asks End To Bias In Housing

Courier-Journal p.6
Thurs. 11-8-56
Louisville Ky.

A suit filed in Federal Court yesterday asked the end of segregation in the City's public-housing projects.

The suit, filed by Attorney J. Earl Dearing on behalf of 12 Negro plaintiffs, alleged the Municipal Housing Commission practices a policy of segregation and discrimination against Negroes that deprives them of due process of law and equal protection of the laws.

38c

The suit asks the court to permanently enjoin the commission and its members from enforcing the segregation policy. The suit also asks the court to declare the segregation policy in violation of the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Dosker Also Named

Named defendants are the commission, its members, and Nicholas H. Dosker, administrator-consultant.

According to the suit, the commission has designated Beecher Terrace, Cotter Homes, Sheppard Square, and College Courts as housing for Negroes. La Salle Place, Iroquois Homes, Parkway Place, and Clarksdale are listed as white housing projects.

It is the commission's policy, according to the suit, to deny a Negro admission to a white housing project even if a vacancy exists.

The suit contends the plaintiffs and others have waited a long time for housing because of fewer vacancies in the Negro projects.

1947 Application Claimed

Dearing said one plaintiff, Josephine Anderson, 514 S. 11th, applied for City housing in 1947 and most of the others in June, 1955.

The suit alleges the segregation policy denies veterans preference to housing and preference given by law to low-income families having urgent need of housing.

Other civil-rights violations claimed in the suit are the requiring of applicants to state their race on the application, selection of tenants for a project on the basis of racial composition of the neighborhood, and maintaining separate lists of white and Negro applicants.

Dosker said he had received a copy of the suit and it will be referred to the commission.

Comment Withheld

Mrs. Elsie Ahrens Lang, commission chairman, said she would prefer not to comment until the matter has been discussed by all commission members.

Plaintiffs listed in addition to Mrs. Anderson are Leola Eleby, 408 S. 19th: Melissa Bradford, 1923 Yale Drive; Georgia Brents, 1503 Esquire Alley; Joanne Billups, 656 S. 13th; William R. Boston, 520 S. Ninth; Corine Brooks, 430 S. 13th; Rosie M. Arnold, 914 Fehr Avenue; William Lee Murray, 422 E. Madison; James Garvin, 911 Marshall; Robert Lee Edwards, 503 Finzer, and Annie Lee Evans, 1610 Breckinridge.

The Negro In The North

Advertiser

Some illuminating sidelights on the problem of the Negro in Northern cities, when he tries to buy or rent a home in an area where Negroes have not lived before, are given in The Atlantic for January. The article, "Negro Neighbors" by Hannah Lees, is the result of some years of research by the author into the reception of Negro families in Northern communities.

Sun. 1-15-56

The magazine, following the typical Northern anti-segregation line, calls the result of the study "disturbing to say the least."

Montgomery, Ala.

We read of "the solid backlog of white city-dwellers who cannot or will not move but still do not want Negro neighbors no matter what their income bracket or where they went to college."

P. 2-B

The article is devoted in large part to details of how Negroes seeking homes in Northern cities are rebuffed, lied to, thwarted by legal technicalities, and otherwise foiled—by the same Yankees who give lip service to "equality" and point with alarm to the South.

One case was that of a Negro couple with one child, who tried to rent a home in the erstwhile Abolitionist stronghold, Boston. The husband. a young Negro physicist from Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., had a research job at the M.I.T. laboratories, his wife had a college degree. Their varied experiences including one with the owner of rental property who was also a merchant. He was so sorry, but if he rented to them he would lose other tenants, and probably a lot of his grocery trade as well.

The saga of this family concluded:

The Powells finally learned, when making inquiries by phone, to say they were Negro almost before they gave their name. This usually led to a facile, reasonably polite brushoff, but it saved time and wear and tear . . . . It was five months before the Powells finally found a three-bedroom duplex apartment in a housing development for research workers which had been built out in the nest of laboratories where Mr. Powell works. It is convenient to Mr. Powell's work but not to anything else.

Interesting also is the report on two Negro brothers who bought a lot with two houses in Detroit, in a location where their nearest Negro neighbors were three or four blocks away:

The night after they moved in, 700 of their neighbors met at a nearby Fundamentalist church, reached deep in their pockets, and raised several thousand dollars cash to buy out the brothers and take over the houses. Detroit has a Mayor's Commission on Community Relations whose job it is to handle this sort of thing, but the commission had not enough power, nor enough administration or community support, to swing the job. The brothers when they appealed to the city were told that if they decided to stay the commission and the police would try to protect them. But the implication was that they might be wise not to try. The story was aired in the papers and the brothers were championed by the NAACP and the Civil Liberties Union, but in the end they sold out. The houses are now occupied by white families.

The article concludes on a "God's in His Heaven—all's right with the world" note. It confidently asserts that "Integrated living is inevitable." This was done after making it rather clear that such integration will be achieved only over the dead bodies, figuratively speaking, of a multitude of Yankees.

The article supports the Southern contention that Northerners are addicted to "discrimination"—with the vice of hypocrisy thrown in.

Prejudice outranks defense

P. 5

Afro-American Sat. 4-7-56

Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON — Owners of property in the areas in which the U.S. guided missile bases are located in nearby Virginia and Maryland apparently are more interested in their prejudices than national defense.

According to an Army source, owners of homes near the sites have refused to lease housing to the Army without a provision barring colored persons.

The Army cannot legally sign such agreements.

THE ARMY, however, indicated that it was conforming to local feeling by turning over the search for colored housing to company and battery commanders.

These officers seek out housing for colored men in their particular units, taking the customs and feeling of the community into consideration.

Many colored technicians have been assigned to the Nike defenses ringing Washington.

THE ARMY wants housing for its men near the Nike sites so that off duty men can respond in a hurry.

The Army is seeking to lease 125 housing units near the sites in this area for up to $150 a month each.

So far, it has been able to locate only 40 units.

* * *

THE PROBLEM develops because many of the skilled colored technicians are reluctant to reenlist if housing is not available.

The Army spokesman said that "We aren't going into a neighborhood and force any of our men where they aren't wanted.

"In time the problem will resolve itself."

HOUSING CALLED AID TO NEGRO LEARNING

Times
Wed. 6-20-56

Interracial housing was described yesterday as a way to interest Negro children in schooling.

New York, N.Y.

Dr. Douglas W. Bray, a research associate of the Columbia University Conservation of Human Resources Project, declared that lack of motivation to learn was a product of discrimination and segregation. He spoke at a symposium on "The Negro Potential" at the new headquarters building of the National Urban League at 14 East Forty-eighth Street.

P. 33-C

Many young persons lose interest in schools because they can see no opportunities available to them even if they do well, Dr. Bray declared. He said that attitude was fostered by parents who saw little reason to encourage their children for the same reason.

Interracial housing is an important factor, Dr. Bray contended, since the mingling of various racial groups in the same neighborhoods would result in their attending the same schools.

Dr. George Edmund Haynes, a co-founder of the league, asserted thatchanges in white-Negro relations were imperative because those seeking guidance were largely the peoples of Asia and Africa and because communism sought to discredit the United States on the ground of discrimination.

Announces Studies Of Minority Housing In Thirteen Cities

Jackson, Miss.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 26.—Twenty-four research projects dealing with the housing problems of minority groups have been undertaken by the Commission on Race and Housing, it was announced last week by Earl B. Schwulst, chairman of the Commission.

B of P. 1

The work of the Commission, organized in June, 1955, is being financed with appropriations from the Fund for the Republic totaling $235,000.

Advocate

Sixteen of the projects announced by Mr. Schwulst are being conducted in cooperation with research institutions and individual investigators in several of the nation's biggest metropolitan centers. All major geographical regions of the United States are included in the studies.

P. 8

Cities on which data are being collected for these "field" studies are Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., San Francisco, Oakland, Atlanta, Birmingham, Norfolk, Houston, San Antonio, Toledo, Los Angeles, Detroit, and New York.

The projects involving these cities are giving special attention to the housing difficulties of four distinct minority groups: Negroes, Puerto Ricans, Americans of Asian origin and Americans of Mexican background.

Atlanta grand jury probes bombings in residential strife

Pre-Afternoon Baltimore Sun Sat. 3-24-56

ATLANTA — A committee of the Fulton County grand jury is probing violence in connection with the sale of homes in previously white areas to colored persons.

The latest incident was the bombing of the home rented by Ernest Simmons which damaged the porch, front door and foundation.

The most recent trouble began approximately six months ago. The office of the solicitor general is also reportedly investigating the violence.

Home Threat Change; This Time It Came Through The Mail

BY SAMUEL L. ADAMS

A Negro, whose recently purchased home in a white neighborhood was bombed, told the Daily World Monday that the white real estate firm that sold him the house indicated they might "pull out" of the area even though they have several clients in the section committed to sell.

The $8,000 home of Jewell Stewart, Jr., 31, was bombed Saturday night shortly after he moved in. The frame house at 2540 Baker Rd., N. W., was purchased from Barksdale Realty Company, a white firm, Mr. Stewart said.

Stewart said he paid $2,000 down on the house and transferred his belongings into the new place between 9 a. m., and 2 p. m., Saturday.

"I was in the house when the bomb exploded. We had the blinds closed and couldn't see who did it," he added.

Daily World

Stewart said he is only one of five persons who have bought homes in this contested area, but the other four have not as yet moved in. Another Negro family is scheduled to move across the street from his home in March, he said.

NO PLANS

Asked if he planned to move, Stewart said: "I haven't planned to move yet, but I probably would if they would give me my equity out of it." A report in another daily newspaper that he already had decided to move is false, he said.

Immediately after the bombing, Stewart took his wife and five-year-old daughter to live with friends of the family on Elm St. He said they rave since been deluged with calls by people offering them temporary housing, food and other help.

He indicated that Monday he layed off from his job at an auto parts company on Peachtree Street to attend to family affairs.

FAMILY SICK

"My wife has a bad case of nerves. I had to carry her to the doctor," he said.

"My little girl has been out of school for three weeks with scarlet fever," he added.

The Stewart home is insured, but clothing and furniture are not.

Stewart denied reports that it was only a firecracker that went off near his home.

"It certainly wasn't a firecracker," he said, "because it shook the whole house. It was in my yard.'

Minutes after the explosion, around 200 people gathered outside the Stewart home.

Sunday afternoon, nearly 600 persons congregated in the 500 block of Commercial St. N. W., a short distance from the Baker Rd. bombing site.

ANONYMOUS CALLERS

A Negro real estate man, selling homes in the block, said he was told by members of the crowd that anonymous callers advertised that there would be a meeting in that block. He described most of the people who gathered as "just curious spectators."

Several Negro real estate firms have "house-for-sale" listings on Commercial and Old Know Streets. Spokesmen from each firm indicated that they were asked by the white home owners to sell their property to Negroes.

One real estate salesman said: "People in the blocks where we list property asked us to come out and sell; so the conflict is not coming from that area. The protest is coming from white agitators living outside of the new expansion area."

He said: "I was the one set from my firm to confer with them (white home owners,) and we told them we wolld not list any houses unless we could get all in the block."

TELLS PRACTICE

Another real estate broker asserted that the practice is to get listed a majority of the houses in a given expansion area before offering any of them for sale.

The area in question is in close proximity to a corridor earmarked by a bi-racial mayor's committee as the expansion area extending to the Chattahoocha River in which the bound-in Negro populace would expand. The practice has been to avoid planting one Negro family in an all white without preplanning and negotiation, according to a member of the Westside Planning.

Bob Stewart, laison officer of the Metropolitan Planning Committee Commission, said reports that blamed Negro real estate dealers for the incident were in error. He said:

NEGROES CAREFUL

"To my knowledge, the Negro real estate men have been careful about sales of homes in that area. That house (Stewart's) was sold by a white firm. I think the story was unfair in placing the responsibility on Negro dealers."

The planning commission officer corroborated the belief that Center Hill residents outside the contested area touched-off the controversy.

"Negro firms have been very careful not to solicit these clients," he said. "In situations of this kind, the solution is difficult, but they can be worked out if everybody is fair about it.

"Misrepresentating the situation does harm. Buyers rely on real estate dealers and it is important that they be fair about it and tell them

Baker Road Again Scene Of Bombing

Constitution P.12

Thurs. 3-1-56

Atlanta, Ga.

A bomb Wednesday night blew the back steps off a home reportedly sold to a Negro in an all-white neighborhood, police said.

Lt. W. K. Perry and Lt. N. M. Taylor said someone apparently tried to throw "the equivalent of at least two" sticks of dynamite into the cellar door of the house at 2431 Baker Rd., NW.

Investigators said they were unable to discover exactly how the bomb was detonated. Damage to the house was minor.

The explosive missed the door and blew off several steps and part of the back porch.

The home was reportedly sold about a week ago to an unidentified Negro. The white frame house has been vacant since the sale, neighbors said.

Two police cars were molested. Capt. E. O. Mullen said he parked a car, walked over to examine the house damage and when he returned the windshield had been broken with a rock. Ptl. J. D. Puckett and J. J. Cook left their car momentarily and later found the air had been let out of a tire.

A minor explosion took place little more than a block away from Wednesday's bombing, at 2540 Baker Rd., where Jewell Stewart Jr., a Negro, recently bought a home.

Police said about 1,500 attended a meeting of the Grove Park Civic League Tuesday night to discuss the earlier blast. They said the meeting was orderly.

"Bombing" Crowd Remains

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Fri. 3-2-56

By SAMUEL L. ADAMS

A red haired white woman master-minded a wave of violence and property destruction that is being fanned into an unmanageable prairie fire of race hate, it was reported Thursday night.

38c

Two bombings in a transition area stone's throw from the all-Negro Lincoln Cemetery and directly behind the Lincoln Country Club were the results of the mob organizing work of a former taxi cab driver, police revealed. She was identified as Mrs. Holmes" of an Old Know Road address.

The first of the bombs exploded in the front yard of a home recently purchased by Jewell Stewart, Jr., at 2540 Baker Rd., N. W. The bombing occurred last Saturday night shortly after Stewart had moved his belongings into the $8,000 frame house.

SECOND BOMB

A second explosion late Wednesday night did considerable damage to the back of an unoccupied one block down the street from the Stewart home at 2431 Baker Rd. The former owner of the damaged dwelling, Walter E. Hamby, white had moved away 1 week earlier and the residence was sold to a Negro woman, Mrs. Alfred E. Stephens, for $9,000.

Thursday night, Atlanta police in an effort to prevent further violence and destruction commissioned a special detail and set up special signals for any emergency. A group of four patrol cars and one detective vehicle parked at Simpson and High tower around 7 p. m. The detail under the direction of Capt. E. O. Mullins, was alerted for an expected demonstration between midnight and 1 a. m.

CROWD GATHERS

Around 9 P. M. Thursday about 20 white persons gathered at the corner of Commercial Avenue and Old Know Street. How many more could be expected to converge on the area could not be predicted, but police were ready for any emergency.

A previous demonstration last Sunday saw nearly 700 people milling in a two-block area on Commercial St. where homes are being offered for sale to Negroes.

The Saturday explosion caused Steward to flee his newly acquired home and live with friends because his wife, as he put it "has a bad case of nerves."

The purchaser of the home bombed Wednesday had not moved in when the explosion occurred. Both homes were purchased through the same real estate firm. Three other dwellings on the street that already have ben sold to Negroes have not been molested so far. Several companies have clients in the area who sought the services of realtists and agreed to sell to Negroes.

The latest bombing completely demolished the back steps and a small porch and did slight damage to the wall of the house, according to Det. Sgt. R. E. Little. Investigating the incidence also was Det. Lt. R. F. Jordan.

MOVE SIGNS

The head of a real estate firm that "pulled out" of the area because of the controversy said "We've been flooded by some civic association saying "Get your signs down! ! !

Explaining that his company was asked to sell the homes, he said, "I think the people out there want their cake and want to eat it too?"

He pointed to rumors that a non-property owner spurred the tension leading to the bombings. He indicated he was told that the agitator does not reside directly in the protested area.

A reliable source gave the Daily World a telephone number which was identified as a possible source of phone calls to stir up the neighborhood. A trace of the number led to a Cato Street address and the home of a family the same as that of the woman said to be master-minding the protest leader. They said she lives on Old Know Street near Commercial Avenue.

It was not revealed whether the woman in question was a home-owner or a renter, but she is presently living close to the contested area. The Cato Street dwelling, which officers suggested may have been her former residence is nearly two miles from the contested blocks.

Other news noted by Mr. Blauner includes the use of white leather details on dresses shown in both Rome and Paris, and especially new and fresh looking on pastel linens and the ultra-feminine cowl neckline emphasized by Balmain.

The ever-popular shirtwaist look was given new elegance by Dior, who showed a group of these dresses in dark tones of chiffon, designed for summer street wear. Mr. Blauner also took note that his own (and consequently Suzy Perette's) favorite silhouette, the princess line, is still top love of such designers as Dior, Balmain, Simonetta and Fabiani.

Georgia Educator To Be Stripped Of Title, Pension

World P.1

ATLANTA, GEORGIA. -(SNS)- A prominent Georgia educator was stripped of an honorary title Wednesday and was threatened with losing his pension for his stand on segregation matters. -16-56

The University system board of Regents voted unanimously to take away Dr. Guy H. Wells' title of President emeritus of the Georgia State College for women.

Dr. Wells had been president of the institution for 19 years and the honorary title was bestowed on him shortly after he resigned in 1954. The Regents offered no explanation for its action. B'ham, Ala.

At the same time, the state board of Education adopted a resolution calling for the discontinuation of the Educator's pension "if legally possible." Pensions are disbursed by the state teachers retirement system an organization independent of the Education Board.

Dr. Wells, executive secretary of the Georgia Council on interracial cooperation, has been engaged in a speaking tour in which he has criticized racial segregation.

In voting to cut off Dr. Wells' pension, James E. Peters, Vice chairman of the Board asked:

"Do you think it's right to pay a man a pension to go around the State lambasting State Government and our way of life?"

Of his dismissal Dr. Wells had this to say:

"I regret that my former employers and friends have taken this action against me without giving me an opportunity to be heard. The account of the Augusta meeting allegedly prepared by one Mr. C. C. Prescott and published in the Augusta Courier is completely inaccurate and distorted. Any responsible inquiry among other persons present will bear this out.

"I have made many speeches upon invitation to civic clubs over the state to discuss our racial problems. In every case I have been well received and have had expressions of appreciation from the Rotary Club and others addressed. I have advocated Negro and white leaders in local communities coming together in goodwill to resolve differences and work for agreement.

"I have nothing to retract or apologize for and I am confident that the good people of Georgia will sustain my position."

Negro Resident Intends to Stay

Times-Picayune P.6

ATLANTA, Feb. 29 (AP) — A Negro who moved his family into a previously all-white neighborhood declared Wednesday he intended to stay, despite a jolting explosion set off in his yard Saturday night.

"I have made my purchase—paid my money down—and I want my own," said Jewell Stewart Jr., employed as a laborer at an automotive parts company. Shreve. 3-1-56

Stewart and his family left after the blast but did not remove their household goods. He said they are delaying their return while efforts are being made to obtain a peaceful agreement for Negroes to occupy the community. New Orleans, La.

The white residents have been divided among themselves on whether to sell their homes and move out or remain and attempt to keep Negroes from moving in.

Stewart said that he had been misunderstood by police officers who quoted him after the explosion as saying he would move "the first thing Monday morning."

What he did say, he explained, was that he would move if the neighborhood were reserved for white residents. But, he contended, there is a definite understanding that it will be opened to Negroes. He said he understood that four homes already have been sold to Negroes.

3rd Bombing In Atlanta

Courier P.2 Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 3-24-56

ATLANTA (ANP) — A third Atlanta explosion early Friday morning damaged the front of a Flora Avenue dwelling while the occupants of the house slept.

What appeared to be dynamite was set off in the front yard of the home of Ernest Simmons of 206 Flora Avenue, N.E., police reported. The early morning bombing tore loose the underpinning of the front porch, and shattered glasses in the front door and windows of the house.

In other recent house bombings explosives were ignited on the front lawn of the newly purchased home of Jewell Stewart Jr., 31, 2540 Baker Road, and a follow-up bombing damaged an unoccupied dwelling bought three days earlier by Mrs. Alfred E. Stephens, 2431 Baker Road, N.W.

The Baker Road bombings were part of a planned protest to prevent other Negroes from buying homes in the previously all-white section.

Racial Issue Splits Whites In Atlanta

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Wed. 2-29-56

ATLANTA, Feb. 28 (AP)—White residents of a community into which a Negro family moved were sharply divided today over whether to sell and move out or remain and try to maintain segregation. P.4-B

An explosion shook the home of the Negro, Jewell Stewart Jr., employed as a laborer by an auto parts company, soon after he moved into the hitherto white community Saturday.

Police quoted him as declaring he intended to get out the "first thing Monday morning." But a white resident, Mrs. Jonah O. Milford, said today that the family had not removed its household goods although she had seen none of them around since Sunday.

COMPLAINT MADE

Mrs. Milford complained that "he should have kept his word and left." She objected strongly to Negroes moving into the community, although they solidly occupy areas a few blocks away and she said she understood two or three homes near her had been sold to them.

"It's not only our homes, but our churches and schools we are in danger of having to give up," she argued.

Another white resident, Mrs. John W. Welch, maintained that the present families should sell their homes and turn the area over to Negroes for residence. She said that she and her husband wanted to sell their home, could not find a white buyer but had a better chance with prospective Negro residents.

'OUTSIDE' AGITATION

Mrs. Welch complained that most of the agitation against Negroes moving in stemmed from white residents some distance away.

"They are saying," she declared "'You all stay up there and keep them off us.'"

Efforts to contact Stewart by telephone failed today. A secretary at the company employing him said he did not report for work either yesterday or today.

Inquiry at the Atlanta office of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People brought a statement that a NAACP attorney had interested himself in the dispute. The attorney could not be reached by telephone.

Family Has Narrow Escape In Bombing

Call P-A Fri. 4-8-56 Kansas City, Mo.

ATLANTA. — (ANP) — Five persons escaped death or serious injury when a bomb demolished their newly-purchased home in an all-white residential area, it was Atlanta's third such incident in three weeks.

Mrs. Eddie Mae Cooper, 49, her daughter, Mrs. Jeanette Howard, 28, and her two children, Glorida, 11 and Mark, 5, and a friend, Cleave Arline, 29, all disappeared after the blast.

By the strangest of coincidences, a white family living next door to the bombed home decided to spend the night with relatives.

Marvin A. Burnett said he just "decided to spend the night at my brother's home about a mile and a half away." He insisted he had not known the house next door had been sold to Negroes.

Burnett told a reporter:

"One of the policemen on the case was a friend of mine and he knew where to find me. The explosion went off about 3:45 in the morning.

I found the house next door almost completely destroyed. The foundation was blown completely out about three or four inches all the way around. The front door was missing. The house was mainly a mess of loose boards and splinters. You could smell the powder in the air."

Burnett said the bomb must have been placed in the basement in the left front corner under the living room.

"It tore an enormous hole in the floor above and a piano fell down in the hole. I'm sure surprised that those colored people in the house weren't hurt bad," he said.

Thirteen houses in the area have been purchased by Negroes have only one has been occupied, without violence, possibly because of an around-the-clock police guard was placed on the house.

Window, Splintered By Rock, Not Felt Part Of "Bombing"

Daily World P.1 Wed. 3-28-56 Atlanta, Ga.

The window of a Hightower Road home was shattered by a huge rock late Monday night, but police say the incident has no connection with three previous bombings in the immediate Baker Road area.

The Negro occupants of the house were preparing to move out when the brick was thrown. The property has been sold to another Negro, police reported.

The house, located at 256 Hightower Road, was occupied by Jessie Knox, 67, and his niece, Mrs. Florine Ray, 26. The new owner of the dwelling was listed as James D. Wall.

Police found foot prints leading off from the rear of the house.

Lt. R. F. Jordan and R. H. Sumpter indicated that Mrs. Ray is by marriage the niece of Will Ray whose Railroad Employees Recreation Club was raided Saturday night. The officers suggested that the rock throwing may be connected with the raid.

"BOMBING" VIOLENCE TO BE INVESTIGATED BY FULTON COUNTY GRAND JURY TEAM

Daily World Tues. 3-13-56 Atlanta, Ga. P.1

Three recent bombings of homes of Atlanta Negroes in "biracial' 'areas provoked the Fulton County Grand Jury to commission a special committee to investigate the violence.

The committee Monday began investigating several bombings reported by Atlanta police.

Two of the explosions occurred in the 2400 and 2500 blocks of Baker Road just back of the Lincoln Country Club in Northwest Atlanta. The most recent bomb was ignited in the 200 block of Flora Street in North East Atlanta.

Several residents of the Baker Road area were called before the committee.

Home occupants narrowly flee death in 4th Atlanta bombing

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 4-7-56

ATLANTA, Ga.—Occupants of a frame dwelling narrowly escaped death last Sunday morning as their home was seriously damaged by an undetermined explosive.

The third bombing in the Baker Rd. area and the fourth recent Atlanta bombing was apparently set off by a professional, police revealed.

The explosion ripped the floor and tore out underpinning of the recently-purchased home of Mrs. Jeanette Howard, 506 Woods Dr., NW, as her family and a visitor slept.

OTHERS NARROWLY escaping injury in the explosion were the young woman's two children, Selona, 11, and Mark, 5; her mother, Mrs. Eddie Mae Cooper; and a visitor, Cleave Arline of a Fair Lane Place address.

Officer W. E. King said he heard a loud noise and found the explosion had occurred just two blocks away.

"I drove to where the noise came from," he said, and "saw where some of the foundation of the house had been blown into the front yard."

* * *

A PINAO AND other furniture crashed through the floor of the shattered home.

Sgt. R. E. Little said it was only a miracle that Mr. Arline was not killed. He had been sleeping on a sofa located near where the explosives were packed.

In addition to extensive damage to the foundation of the house, gas lines were torn loose, walls were cracked, a lamp was blown into the ceiling, and furniture, glasses and other property were shattered.

* * *

THE OCCUPANTS of the damaged dwelling moved out some four hours after the explosion.

Police said a search is being made to determine the type of explosive used. The area has been processed for fragments to determine the type of container in which the explosives were placed.

RUINS OF ATLANTA NEGRO'S LIVING ROOM
. . . occupants of house were blown out of bed

Five persons were asleep in the house. Officers said some of the occupants were literally blown out of their beds but none was injured.

"We believe dynamite or powder of some type was used," Sgt. C. C. Hamby of the Detective Bureau said.

The left front corner foundation of the white frame structure was shattered by the blast. A hole was ripped in the living room floor and an upright piano toppled into the cavity.

A floor lamp was blown through the ceiling.

Officers said the house was virtually knocked off its foundation.

Occupants of the structure were listed as Jeanette Howard, 28, her children, Gloria Howard, 11, and Mark Howard, 5; Eddie Mae Cooper, 49, mother of Jeanette Howard; and a friend, Cleave Arline, 29.

A neighbor's home, owned by a white man, was damaged by the blast.

Hamby said all of the Negroes left the wrecked home within a few hours of the explosion. He said none have returned.

No arrests have been made. Hamby said an investigation of the incident is continuing.

Several similar explosions have occurred in the same general area of Atlanta during the past month, Hamby reported. He said the blasts apparently were made with the intention of driving Negroes from neighborhoods predominantly occupied by white residents.

It apparently was set off by a professional, police said.

The explosion ripped the floor and tore out underpinning of the recently purchased home of Mrs. Jeannette Howard 28, as her family and a visitor slept.

In addition to Mrs Howard, others narrowly escaping injury were the young woman's two children, Selona, 11, and Mark 5, her mother, Mrs. Eddie Mae Cooper, and the visitor, Cleave Arling, 29.

Officer W. E. King said he heard a loud noise and found the explosion had occurred just two blocks away. "I drove to where the noise came from," he said, "and saw where some of the foundation of the house had been blown into the front yard."

A piano and other furniture crashed through the floor of the shattered home.

MIRACLE

Sergt. R. E. Little said it was a miracle that Mr Arling was not killed. He had been sleeping on a sofa located near where the explosives were packed.

In addition to extensive damage to the foundation of the house, gas lines were torn loose, walls were cracked, a lamp was blown into the ceiling, and furniture, glasses and other property were shattered. The occupants of the dwelling moved out some four hours after the explosion.

Police said a search was being made to determine the type of explosive used.. The area was searched for fragments to determine the type of container in which the explosives were placed.

Home "Bombed" While Owners Slumber

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Sat. 3-10-56

A third Atlanta explosion early Friday morning damaged the front of a Flora Ave., dwelling while the occupants of the house slept.

What appeared to be dynamite was set off in the front yard of the home of Earnest Simmons, of 206 Flora Ave., N. E., police reported. The early morning bombing tore loose the underpinning of the front porch, and shattered glasses in the front door and windows of the house

Det. M. W. Blackwell asserted that the Simmons family had lived in the bombed dwelling only two months. Occupants of the damaged house said they had experienced no previous trouble from neighbors and that they were in bed sleep when the incident occurred.

In other recent house bombings, explosives were ignited on the front lawn of the newly purchased home of Jewell Stewart, Jr., 31, 2540 Baker Rd., and a follow-up bombing damaged an unoccupied dwelling bought three days earlier by Mrs. Alfred E. Stephens, 2431 Baker Rd. N. W.

The Baker Road bombings were part of a planned protest to prevent other Negroes from buying homes in the previously all-white section.

Efficient detective work exposed persons responsible for agitating the already sore spot and averted costinued demonstrations in the contested area. The latest explosion was in the Northeast section of the city.

Bombing Victims Expected At Meeting Tuesday Night

Daily Herald P.1 Sun. 4-22-56 Atlanta, Ga.

Victims of bombing attacks on homes they bought in the northwest section of the city are expected to be present and tell of their experiences during the disorders when citizens of that area gather at the West Hunter Street Baptist Church Tuesday night.

The meeting is being sponsored by the Westside Voters League of which Atty. Cassandra Maxwell is president and it begins at eight o'clock.

A league officer stated to the World that three of the persons who have been affected by the attacks have called since the announcement of the meeting yesterday and stated they would be present. Mrs. Gertrude Anderson whose home suffered the latest bombing stated that she would be present and make a steatment.

Jesse O. Thomas who is head of a special committee named by the league to look into the activitity regarding the housing attacks stated to the World Saturday at his committee would make an investigation into the matter and see if it can find a way to help Negro citizens with th ehousing problems.

Speakers will include Jesse O. Thomas, director of the Voters Registration Committee; C. A. Scott, editor and general manager of the Atlanta Daily World, who will discuss some of the recent developments in the area which affect the welfare of the citizens in general and Prof. C. A. Bacote also of the Registration Committee, Rod Harris, an official of the league, will speak on the importance of the ballot.

League officials are especially asking all citizens who have been affected by the bombings to appear with the view of seing if their problems have been satisfactorily adjusted.

One official of the group told the World that the mass meting will also discuss and take some action in protesting the action recently taken regarding the leasing of twelve of the state parks to private individuals.

Dynamite Rips Hole In Old Know Rd. Pavement

Daily Herald P.1 Sat. 4-14-56 Atlanta, Ga.

BY SAMUEL ADAMS

A dynamite explosion near the newly purchased home of two Negro women left two houses considerably damaged early Friday at 2576 Old Know and 2584 Old Know.

Police said the explosive was apparently hurled at the home of Mrs. Gertrude Anderson and Miss Eleanor Anderson, but rolled down an embankment and exploded in the street. A hole was torn in the street; the Anderson home and that of a white resident across the street were damaged.

Some weeks earlier, three such explosions occurred on Baker Rd., one block South from Friday's bombing site Targets of the explosives have been homes bought or moved into by Negroes.

At the time of the explosion, the Anderson home was occupied by Walter Smart and Miss Anderson nephew and daughter of Mrs. Anderson. The trio recently came to Atlanta from Birmingham

The home of Guy M. Maxwell, 32, (white) appearently suffered greater damage than that of the intended victims.

Added intrigue came shortly after the 1:23 a. m., explosion. A mob consisting of some 100 white residents of the area, after observing a Negro man investigating the excitement, chased him one block to where his car was parked and then proceeded to stone the vehicle, breaking the glasses.

A white man, hospitalized with jagged glass cuts on his arm sustained his injuries, police theorized, while trying to reach in the car to grab the fleeing man. He escaped unharmed.

Mr. Maxwell said a "for sale" sign is displayed in his front yard, but community residents have tried to get him not to offer his home for sale to Negroes.

His wife said: "I don't know who could have done it. I wouldn't have the heart to do that kind of hing. Those people (Negroes) are nice and don't bother anybody."

The couple has lived in the community six years and have a son, age three and a daughter, age five.

While waiting for an insurance adjustor to okay carpentry and window repairs, Smart, the young Social Worker student, recalled the jibes and threats hurled at them after the blast.

In addition to calling them insulting names, he said, one woman member of the crowd gathered on his lawn said:

"They (whites) asked them three or four times to move, and another answered: 'They are still in there?'

"Yeah," came the retort, "They are in theire and they say they're gonna stay."

Mrs. Anderson told of rumors she believes helped to encourage violence. These rumors persist Negroes are asking a fabulous price for the house; they refuse to move; and they are trying to make a test case. They have no foundation of fact, she added. She indicated incident does not frighten her.

The Westside Improving Association, organized to buy property in the area, is negotiating with the Andersons but have not met price demands. Mrs. Anderson believes money spent traveling to and from Alabama in order to make the purchase also is capital invested in her home.

In addition to broken window glasses, both of the damaged dwellings have nails pushed through wall surfaces. Maxwell temporarily placed cardboard over his windows to keep out cool air, but the Andersons said they would have the windows replaced before night.

The Maxwells said they expected the explosion because they were told to move to the far side of the house because it might happen anytime.

Police launched an investigation and began a search for clues that would lead to the arrest of those responsible for the crime.

Atlantan Indicted In Incident Near "Bombed" Residence

Daily World Sat. 4-28-56 Atlanta, Ga.

A young white man accused of attempting an attack on a Negro shortly after a house bombing on Old Know Road was indicted Tuesday by a Fulton County Grand Jury on two misdemeanor charges.

Allen Oglesby is charged in separate indictments of simple assault and malicious mischief. The documents allege Oglesby assaulted Edward L. Burton by striking at him with his fist "with intent to commit a violent injury."

Oglesby is also accused of damaging Burton's Pontiac automobile by breaking a glass out of the door and striking the vehicle with "some instrument to the Grand Jurors unknown."

The incident leading to the Grand Jury's action occurred April 13, subsequent to an explosion that damaged frame dwellings at 2576 and 2584 Old Know Rd. (It was the fourth bombing in the area, apparently intended to chase Negro owners of newly purchased homes from the previously all-white area.)

Following the last explosion, police reported that Oglesby was hospitalized with jagged cuts on his hand and arm. Police said witnesses told them he injured himself trying to pull a Negro from a car.

The driver of the car explained that he went to the scene of the loud explosion out of curiosity but was forced to flee when a group of white persons stoned him and his automobile and attempoed bodily assault on his person, police reported. Damage to the vehicle was estimated at $700.

The Grand Jury also returned a "true bill" against Luther Clay, Jr. for the April 15 stabbing of Agnes Smith, R-343 Merritts Ave. NE. Clay is charged with "assault with intent to murder."

ATLANTA (ANP) — A third Atlanta explosion early Friday morning damaged the front of a Flora Ave. dwelling while the occupants of the house slept.

What appeared to be dynamite was set off in the front yard of the home of Earnest Simmons of 206 Flora Ave., NE, police reported. The bombing damaged porch underpinnings and door and window glasses.

Sat. 3-24-56

DET. M. W. BLACKWELL asserted that the Simmons family had lived in the dwelling only two months.

Occupants of the damaged house said they had experienced no previous trouble from neighbors and that they were in bed asleep when the incident occurred.

IN OTHER recent house bombings explosives were ignited on the front lawn of the newly purchased home of Jewell Stewart Jr., 31, 2540 Baker Rd.

A follow-up bombing damaged an unoccupied dwelling bought three days earlier by Mrs. Alfred E. Stephens of 2431 Baker Rd., NW.

The Baker Road bombings were believed to be a part of a planned protest to prevent other colored from buying homes in these previously all-white section.

Blast set off in Negro-white area of Atlanta

News P. 1
Fri. 4-13-56

ATLANTA, April 13—(AP)—Dynamite, apparently thrown at a Negro-occupied house in a white neighborhood, exploded in the street and damaged two houses early today.

Detective Sgt. R. E. Little said no one was injured in the blast about 1:30 a.m. A small hole was torn in the street and windows were shatered in the two houses.

The area, in Northwest Atlanta, is near a section where Negroes have moved into houses formerly occupied by whites. However, the home of Eleanor N. Anderson was the only one in the immediate area occupied by Negroes, officers said.

The Anderson house was more heavily damaged than that of a white man, Guy W. Maxwell, across the street. Maxwell, his wife and two small children were showered with broken glass but escaped injury.

Blames Solicitor's Office in Bombings

ATLANTA, Ga.—The present solicitor-general's office of Fulton County is "directly connected with the house bombings in this area," according to Al Roberts, East Point Mayor and candidate for Solicitor General. The incumbent was charged with this connection during a speech at Union Baptist Church.

Mr. Roberts in leveling the blast at the administration of the office pointed out "not one of the guilty parties has been brought to trial.

"I say that there is a direct connection between the bombings and the solicitor's office," he further charged.

THE BOMBINGS referred to were the Baker Road Northwest bombings of early March. A series of explosions damaging newly purchased homes occurred while occupants slept.

The first home to be bombed was that of 31-year-old Jewell Stewart, 2540 Baker Rd. Follow-up bombings damaged an unoccupied dwelling bought by Mrs. Alfred E. Stephens, 2431 Baker Rd. and 506 Woods Dr., N. W. A fourth explosion damaged the front porch of 206 Flora Ave., N. E.

A special committee of the Fulton County grand jury conducted an investigation, but no indictments were returned.

Several residents of the area were called before the committee.

Meanwhile a group of white citizens formed a corporation and repurchased the homes in the neighborhood owned by Negroes.

Bombings To Be Investigated; Park Leasing Protest Launched

Daily World Wed. 4-25-56 P.1

Atlanta, Ga.

After hearing several speakers last night the Westside Voters League took two principal actions. The group, meeting at the West Hunter Street Baptist church voted:

1. Two authorize the executive committee headed by Prof. B. T. Harvey to investigate the developments relating to the housing bombings and disorder that have occurred in the Baker Road area.

2. It instructed the same committee to release a protest to the recently announced leasing of twelve state parks to private interests.

PUBLIC OPINION

Jesse O. Thomas pointed out how even the court has been influenced by public opinion and stressed the importance of the ballot. He said the status of women has been raised since woman's suffrage.

C. A. Bacote also spoke to the meeting. Mr. Bacote, chairman of the All Citizens Registration Committee said the campaign was progressing and estimated that 5,000 more persons are expected to register by the May 5th deadline.

Mrs. Gertrude Anderson, the sister of the Rev. A. F. Fisher pastor of the church where the meeting was held, told of her experiences in the area where there developed tension. She said she bought in the area, the only place she had found the type and priced house she wanted.

She expressed regret that the committee dealing with the problem did not consult closer with the new home owners before agreeing to terms of reselling to a corporation set up by white people.

REQUESTED AID

C. A. Scott, of the Atlanta Daily World, told how the purchasers of two houses in the contested area had called the paper and requested whatever assistance they could get. Scott described the situation as simply one of law and order and deplored the fact that what he considered as one of the most basic rights of our people was not protected adequately.

COMMITTEE NAMED

B. T. Harvey said his committee would look thoroughly into the housing problem and would seek to determine how many Negroes on the westside who were desirous of buying homes. Persons concerned were requested to call Mr. Harvey or President Cassandra Maxwell.

Rev. M. L. King spoke out in protest of the bombings and expressed the belief that it might have been possible to prevent the necessity of the citizens reselling their newly purchased homes if the issue had been taken up by the people earlier. Mrs. Anderson had stated that about twelve homes had been sold in the area to Negroes and that she believed all these homes had been resold to a white corporation.

Al Alston told of similar attacks in the Cairo Street area last year.

Rod Harris paid tribute to the Rev. M. L. King, Jr., of Montgomery and told of the importance of the Negro voters sticking together and demanding protection of their rights. He seconded the motion regarding the leasing of the state parks.

W. G. Mitchell of the Fairview Terrace Civic League said he wanted closer cooperation between the various organizations on the westside.

President Maxwell mentioned the possibility of the housing problem becoming more acute when an expressway development comes in that section.

MASS MEETING THURSDAY NIGHT

A mass meeting sponsored by the Mozley Park Civic Association, will be held at the Union Baptist Church Thursday night at 8 p. m. This meeting will deal mainly with registration and voting.

Dr. Albert N. Whiting will preside over the program and direct questions from the audience. A special feature of the meeting will be a discussion of the problems involved in the bombing of homes in the Northwest area. Music will be furnished by Marcus Williams, of the Mozley Park Advisory Council and Community Center.

Death Narrowly Missed In New House "Bombing"

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Tues. 3-24-56

Negro occupants of a frame dwelling narrowly escaped death at 4 a. m. Sunday morning as their home was seriously damaged.

The third bombing in the Baker Road area and the fourth recent Atlanta bombing was apparently set off by a professional, police revealed. The explosion ripped the floor and tore out underpinning of the recently purchased home of Mrs. Jeanette Howard, 28, 506 Woods Dr. NW, as her family and a visitor slept.

P. 1

Others narrowly escaping injury in the explosion were the young woman's two children, Selona, 11, and Mark 5, her mother, Mrs. Eddie Mae Cooper, and a visitor, Cleave Arline, 29, of a Fair Lane Place address.

Daily World

Ptl. W. E. King said he heard a loud noise and found the explosion had occurred just two blocks away. "I drove to where the noise came from," he said, and "saw where some of the foundation of the house had been blown into the front yard."

P. 1

A piano and other furniture crashed through the floor of the shattered home.

Sgt. R. E. Little said it was only a miracle that Mr. Arline was not killed. He had been sleeping on a sofa located near where the explosives were packed.

In addition to extensive damage to the foundation of the house, gas lines were torn loose, walls were cracked, a lamp was blown into the ceiling and furniture, glasses and other property were shattered.

The occupants of damaged dwelling moved out some four hours after the explosion.

Police said a search is being made to determine the type of explosive used. The area has been processed for fragments to determine the type of container in which the explosives were placed.

Woods Drive is located just three blocks from Hightower Road going East on Baker Road. Two other homes in the immediate area were bombed several weeks ago. Another bombing occurred on Flora Street in Northeast Atlanta.

The latest bombing also did minor damage to the home of a white family who lived next door to the Negro family. The Negroes moved in two days earlier.

These Bombings Should Be Stopped

About two o'clock Friday morning a stick of dynamite was thrown toward a home purchased and occupied by a Negro family in the Northwest section of the city. The blast was considerable, doing damage to its main target and also another house occupied across the street. Daily World P. 6

Yesterday's blast was the fourth such brutal attack that has been made on homes purchased by Negroes in this area since February 25th. Sat. 4-14-56

We share with the people a growing alarm over these unwarranted and illegal actions against citizens solely on the basis of race. Apparently there is no federal jurisdiction at present over such action, but they are clearly in violation of state law and local and county authorities have a duty to act.

It is reliably learned that a recent Grand Jury questioned several white citizens of that area regarding the disorders that have occurred earlier this year. Atlanta, Ga.

If some definite and firm action is not immediately taken by the authorities we fear a continuation and perhaps an intensification of the terror tactics.

Race relations in this city are good and we want to see that condition continued. But bombings of peaceful citizens while asleep in their homes is a thought that is most disturbing to us.

Let us all hope that law and order will be upheld and those responsible for these bombings will be apprehended and punished.

Police Probing New Bomb Blast In Mixed Area

Constitution P.13 Sat. 4-14-56 Atlanta, Ga.

Police Friday began an intensive investigation into the latest bomb-hurling incident in a mixed white and Negro section of northwest Atlanta.

The blast was set off shortly after midnight Thursday near the intersection of Old Know drive and Commercial avenue, NW. It shattered windows in houses on either side of the street, one occupied by whites and the other by Negroes.

Investigators located a Negro man whose auto windows were broken out immediately after the incident. He said, however, he heard the explosion, drove past to see what had happened and the car windows were broken when he became blocked in traffic.

A white man appeared at Grady Hospital for treatment of a cut arm soon after the blast, police said. He was treated at Grady and transferred to a private hospital.

The address given by the man at the hospital was a considerable distance from the Old Know-Commercial section.

Negroes Sell Corp. Homes In White Area

Wed. 4-25-56
Atlanta, Ga.

The West Side Development Corp. has raised $30,000 and purchased nine white area homes recently sold to Negroes, it was disclosed Tuesday night at a meeting of the Grove Park Civic League.

Mayor Hartsfield, addressing approximately 250 persons in the Lena H. Cox school auditorium, told the audience, "We are hopeful the situation is now stabilized."

He congratulated them by saying, "You have gone about this matter in a legal manner, and we are proud of the way the situation has been adjusted."

The mayor said he held a $100 subscription in the corporation.

Resentment of white persons against the Negroes moving in resulted recently in several incidents of dynamiting.

Ray Gary, president of the league, said the nine properties had been vacated by the Negroes. He added election of officers is slated for the near future.

GEORGIA HOUSING CASE REMANDED

Times-Picayune
Sat. 12-1-56
New Orleans, La.

Dismissal of Anti-Segregation Suit Reversed

The United States Fifth Circuit Court of appeals has ordered back to a Georgia federal court a case in which 18 Negroes seek to restrain public housing officials from maintaining a policy of segregation in public housing projects in Savannah, Ga. P. 15

The court reversed and remanded an action of the federal district court for the southern district of Georgia which dismissed a suit against the Savannah housing authority.

In another phase of the case the court of appeals, in an opinion by Judge Wayne G. Borah, sustained the district court's action in dismissing a suit against the public housing authority and its Atlanta field office director. That phase of the case was dismissed by the lower court on a motion for summary judgment filed by the PHA.

Dismissed by District Court

The district court had dismissed the action against the Savannah housing authority also on grounds that the plaintiffs were afforded equal though separate housing facilities and their civil rights were not violated.

In upholding the dismissal as to the PHA and its director, the appeals court held that neither the PHA nor its director acted under any color of state law.

The opinion further points out that the plaintiffs' case against the PHA is based on the proposition that the regulation and control exercised by the federal agency is so extensive and the relationship between the federal agency and SHA "so intimate that the actions of the one must be deemed to be the acts of the other and pursuant to state law or custom."

The opinion added that it clearly appears that the PHA and the director acted in accordance with federal statutes and not under any state law.

Judge Borah Disagrees

Judge Borah disagreed with the district court's dismissal of the action as to the Savannah housing authority on the ground that the plaintiffs failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.

He said, "we think the complaint sets forth a claim under the civil rights statute and that claim is: that appellants were nor permitted to make application for any project limited to white occupancy, that they are denied to lease housing facilities provided by public funds under conditions set forth in the statute and equal to those imposed upon white families, and that such action on the part of SHA and its officers constituted a deprivation under color of state law . . . of the rights guaranteed to them by the Fourteenth amendment to the constitution and the federal housing acts."

Concurring in Judge Borah's opinion were Chief Judge Joseph G. Hutcheson Jr., and Judge John W. Brown.

War Or Peace At Trumbull Park?

Defender Sat. 5-5-56 Chicago, Ill. P3

Top Cop, Housing Boss Don't Agree

A wide difference of opinion exists among city officials as to the current status of race relations in Trumbull Park, where for almost three years Negro families have been subjected to pressures ranging from a subtle war of nerves to outright terror and violence.

Kean said that "the fact that it is necessary to maintain a police force is persuasive evidence that the racial tension problems have not been sufficiently alleviated. . ."

38c

O'Connor's note of optimism was in reply to request from religious and community leaders that Mayor Daley set up a meeting of city leaders to seek a solution to the three-year-old race problem.

The idea was adopted at a meet-

One view came from Police Commissioner Timothy O'Connor, who declared Tuesday that "we have not had a disturbance in Trumbull Park in six months."

An entirely different feeling about t he troubled area was revealed in a letter from Gen. W. B. Kean, executive director of the Chicago Housing Authority, to Mrs. E. M. Brown, 10717 Yates ave., who was the spokesman for a group of residents seeking to hold a meeting in the project.

ing sponsored by the National Christian Protective association at which a panel group discussed the situation and ways in which it might be remedied.

On the panel were Ald. William H. Harvey (2nd); Ald. Ralph H. Metcalfe, (3rd); State Rep. Charles Skyles (5th); Fritz Pollard, Chicago Commission on Human Relations; Frank Brown, Trumbull Park resident; the Rev. John S. Thurston, 44th Street Baptist Church; the Reverend E. R. Williams, South Parkway Baptist Church, and other civic and religious leaders.

Pollard pointed out that only some 100 police are posted in the area, compared to more than 1,200 at the height of the disorders.

On the less encouraging side, Kean's letter to Mrs. Brown was in answer to a letter addressed to Harvey Peck, manager of Trumbull Park. In addition to Mrs. Brown, other signers were Mrs. R. Levy, 10602 S. Yates; Mrs. C. Page, 10660 S. Oglesby; Mrs. S. Scott, 2522 E. 107th st., and Mrs. L. Williams, 10613 S. Eglesby.

They requested permission to hold a meeting, which non-residents would be allowed to attend, to "discuss how the tenants of the project can work together on a community educational program."

In reply, Kean said:

"It appears that a major purpose of the proposed conference is to discuss racial problems in the project and surrounding community . . . . . Under normal cicrumstances, I would be only too pleased to grant the permission you request . . ."

"I have some very strong reservations, however, about the property of the gathering you have in mind at the present time. An outside meeting at Trumbull Park homes, under existing circumstances, might invite disturbances of the peace. . .

"As you know, a substantial number of police are still in attendance on an around-the-clock schedule to protect tenants and protect property. The fact that it is necessary to maintain a police force is persuassive evidence that the racial tensions have not been sufficiently alleviated to justify the holding of an open meeting, particularly one which revolves around the very issues that require the maintenance of a police protective force."

As the weekend neared, there was no indication what steps Mayor Daley would take in response to the request for a meeting on the Trumbull Park matter, but there is the certainty that something should be done to bring agreement between city officials on just how serious the problem is.

To Drop Suit Against Chicago Housing Body

Call Fri. 5-11-56 P.2

Kansas City, Mo.

CHICAGO. — (ANP) — Attorneys for Donald and Betty Howard, the first Negro tenants at Trumbull Park Homes, filed a stipulation in the circuit court of Cook county to dismiss a suit entered last year against the Chicago Housing Authority, six of its officials, and five Chicago newspapers.

Suit was brought by the Howards, seeking a total of $1,700,000 in damages for conspiracy and libel, after the family had been evicted from the CHA Housing development for failure to comply with the Authority's regulations.

The court dismissed the complaint and ruled there was no basis for the liability charge, but gave the plaintiffs an opportunity to file an amended complaint. This step was never taken, and consequently no hearings were held.

Entry of the Howard family to Trumbull Park Homes touched off numerous disturbances in the neighborhood surrounding the CHA project protesting the presence of Negro tenants in the area.

Howard was recently arrested and charged with disorderly conduct after allegedly destroying furniture in his home and threatening his wife.

Cardinal Stritch Assails Trumbull Park Violence

Defender Sat. 6-23-56 P. 10

Chicago Ill.

By ETHEL L. PAYNE

Samuel Cardinal Stritch, Archbishop of Chicago last week attacked racial bias, which is still causing tension in Chicago's Trumbull Park, when he declared:

"Anything which is in violation of peoples' rights is wrong. We have no word of sympathy or mitigation for the use of violence or discrimination by those who are practicing it."

The Roman Catholic prelate broke a five year silence when he held a press conference in the Chancery offices at 719 N. Wabash ave.

In answer to a question on whether the church was doing anything to ease the tension in that troubled area, the Cardinal replied:

"We are very much aware of the problem. We have been working for sometime on it and are continuing to do so.

STRONG CATHOLIC AREA

Trumbull Park is in the heart of a strongly Catholic area, many of whom belong to the Polish National Catholic church, which is a separate entity from the Roman Catholic church.

Although many of the rioters and the agitators in the disturbances have been identified as Catholic, this is the first time the church has taken any official position on the matter.

Lately, the tension has been easing somewhat and some Negro families are attending Catholic churches in the district. The large police force kept on hand to maintain order has been reduced to 72 and may be completely withdrawn soon, according to Police Comm. O'Connor's office.

The conference was called by the Cardinal to announce plans for the welfare and assistantance to the rapidly increasing Puerto Rican population in the city, which now numbers around 20,000.

June 24 has been proclaimed by Mayor Daley and the Cardinal as the special observance of San Juan day (Knights of St. John) who is the patron saint of the Puerto Ricans. A special mass will be said by the Cardinal at Holy Name Cathedral with a day long festival to follow at the Chicago Arena.

In addition to the Puerto Ricans, the committee is concerned with 30,000 Mexicans and 12,000 Filipinos in Chicago.

Cardinal Stritch said that the primary goal is the integration of these groups into the normal pattern of living in the city, and to prevent the creation of more ghettoes.

TRANSITION BRINGS SHOCK

Asked if a similar policy and program was planned for Negro Catholics, including newcomers to the city from the South, the Cardinal said, "We are trying to do everything we can. The transition from the plantation lands of Mississippi to urban life is a shock to the individual.

"We are providing educational facilities and other services to assist in adustment as much as possible. But always, we are keeping in mind that this is a part of the transition period, and the ultimate goal is full integration into the total life of the city."

To assist the Puerto Ricans who have not yet learned to speak English, two centers have been set up to offer religious services in Spanish.

Arsonists Strike Chemists' Home

Defender Sat. 6-2-56 p.3

An alert neighor is credited with preventing the possible destruction by fire of the home of Dr. and Mrs. Luke Nelson, 6026 S. Bishop, after unknown vandals placed a burning crosstie against the house.

Mrs. Elizabeth Herndon, who lives at 6028 S. Bishop saw the flames and called police, who extinguished the blaze before any serious damage could be done. A rear wall of the house was damaged.

Mrs. Nelson could give no motive for the act. She told the Defender that she and her husband moved into the neighborhood last November and had not been molested or threatened.

The neighborhood is changing, with white families leaving at the rate of one a week, according to Mrs. Nelson. She said that most of the residents in the block are Negroes.

The attempted arson occurred during one of the rare times when no one was in the Nelson home. Mrs. Nelson, who has three-month-old twins, was away visitng relatives, and her husband had gone out on business.

They were not informed of the incident until Wednesday afternoon some 17 hours after it happened. Police have been unable to find any clues to the culprits or the motive.

Dr. Nelson, who is engaged in private practice, is also a chemical engineer for the Ford Motor company.

Mrs. Emma Jackson, mother of Mrs. Nelson, is staying at the Nelson house to look after her daughter, who recently suffered a heart attack.

Mrs. Jackson said one of the neighbors reported that white children have been shouting racial ephitets at Negro residents recently.

Mixed six appeal cafe fracas fines

Afro-American Sat. 7-7-56

CHICAGO — The case of six members of an interracial group found guilty of disorderly conduct as the aftermath of their efforts to secure service at Jennie's Cafe, 658 E. 79th St., on May 11, has been appealed to the First District of the Appellate Court of Illinois.

Judge Alexander J. Napoli in Boy's Court found the group guilty on June 19 and fixed their fines at $100 each. Bond was set at $200 each when Howard T. Savage of the NAACP legal staff and attorney for the defendants announced his intentions of appealing the ruling. A stay of mittini was granted until July 3.

"It is my intention," said Mr. Savage, "to take the appeal to every court of last resort available until the issue is either determined in favor of the victims of prejudice or until there is no court but God's court to go to."

IN FINDING the group guilty, the court held that because the defendants had some skepticism about being served before they went to the restaurant, then elected to stay and insist upon their rights, they were guilty of disorderly conduct.

Judge Napoli held that they should have sought redress through civil action rather than remain in the restaurant. The defendants, all members of the Chicago Committee of Racial Equality, were Mrs. Katheryn Fields, John Corney, Mrs. Jeanne Wesson, Fred Fields, Dale Drews and John Forbes.

A seventh person, Joffre Stewart, arrested along with the group, was scheduled for a separate trial on June 28. Prior to that he was in the Bridewell Hospital where he staged a hunger strike. Warden Sain said he was being fed through his veins.

Negro Drops Suit In Housing Row

Star 5-33-A Tue. 3-4-56

CHICAGO, May 4 (AP).—A Negro whose move into a Southeast Side public housing project touched off disturbances has dropped a $1.7 million suit against five Chicago newspapers and the Chicago Housing Authority.

Donald Howard and his wife and two children moved into the Trumbull Park project in the summer of 1953. They were the first Negroes in the project. A police detail has been maintained there since to insure order. Other Negro families moved in later.

Mr. Howard, who moved out of the project May 3, 1954, charged in his suit that officials of the authority, which operates the project, and the newspapers libeled him and his family and conspired to oust them.

His attorneys, it was ascertained yesterday, filed a stipulation in the court April 27 agreeing to drop the suit. Newspapers that had been named are the News, Tribune, Sun-Times, American and Daily Calumet.

1,500 Mob Couple Host To Negroes

Defender Chicago Ill. Sat. 8-25-56 p.1

Police late last week still were patrolling an area on Chicago's westside where Monday 20 squads of police were called to disperse a mob of 1,500 which gathered when a rumor spread that a white family planned to sell their home to Negroes.

The crowd increased to nearly 1,500 persons by the time police dispersed it around midnight Monday.

It formed while Santos Le Verde and his wife, Josephine, of 2900 W. 38th st., were entertaining Mr and Mrs. Paul Nunn of Seattle, Wash.

The Le Verde family formerly lived in Seattle. When they left that city they invited the Nunns to visit them in Chicago.

Monday the Nunn family stopped in Chicago on their way to Louisiana and decided to accept the LeVerde invitation.

Brighton Park Police said they arrived at the Le Verde home around 1 p.m. and remained for a few hours.

Police asserted word of their presence spread and the crowd began forming while the visitors still were in the home.

The numbers increased as other persons returned home from work and heard the news.

By 7 p. m:, the crowd had reached such proportions that plan 2 was put into effect. About an hour and a half later, plan 5 was sounded and the 20 squad cars responded.

Police said Tuesday the situation was "quiet" but suggested that a Defender reporter not try to visit the Le Verdes for an interview because it might "aggravate" things.

Sun. 8-13-56

Police said the crowd assembled on the basis of a groundless rumor that a Negro family planned to move into a white neighborhood on the southwest side.

The demonstrators were dispersed by a detail of 60 policemen. Before things quieted down, three windows in the home of Santo J. Loverde, white, at 2900 28th st., were smashed by stones, and the automobile of a policeman who lives in the neighborhood was damaged.

Police said the disturbance apparently was touched off by a friendly visit paid to Loverde by seven members of a Negro family he had met while he was on military duty in Seattle, Wash., in 1946.

Loverde said the visitors, en route from Seattle to West Virginia, were Viola Barnes, her five stepchildren, and her son-in-law.

After the demonstration began, Loverde, a city Water Department employe, took his guests to the Illinois Central railway station, escorted by a squad of police.

The damaged automobile belonged to Policeman Ronald Failson, a son-in-law of Mrs. Loverde, who was on duty at the Democratic convention hall, the International Amphitheater, when the trouble began.

Chicago, Ill., Aug. 15.—A throng of 2,000 engaged in an anti-Negro demonstration Tuesday night less than two miles from the Democratic National Convention.

Robert Ryan, deputy chief of the uniformed police said the crowd assembled on the basis of a groundless rumor that a Negro family planned to move into a white neighborhood on the southwest side.

The demonstrators were dispersed by a detail of 60 policemen. Before things quieted down, three windows in the home of Santo J. Loverde, white, at 2900 W. 38th St., were smashed by stones, and the automobile of a policeman who lives in the neighborhood was damaged.

Advocate 7.7

Ryan said the disturbance apparently was touched off by a friendly visit paid to Loverde by seven members of a Negro family he had met while he was on military duty in Seattle, Wash., in 1946.

Sat. 8-18-56

Loverde said the visitors, en route from Seattle to West Virginia, were Mrs. Viola Barnes, her five stepchildren, and her son-in-law.

After the demonstration begun, Loverde, a city employe, took his guests to the Illinois Central Railroad station, escorted by a squad of police.

The damaged automobile belonged to policeman Ronald Railson, a son-in-law of Mrs. Loverde, who was on duty at the Democratic convention hall, the International Amphitheatre, when the trouble began.

Teen Hoods Stone, Beat Trumbull Park Tenant, 29

Defender Sat. 2-4-56 p. 10 Chicago, Ill.

A reduced police detail in Trumbull Park last week was the signal for race haters to step up their violence against Negro tenants in the area.

Bearing the brunt of the violence was Melvin Williamson, 29, of 10524 S. Oglesby st., who was severely beaten and stoned by a mob of from 15 to 20 white lads ranging in age from 13 to 16.

Williamson who works for the Reeman's Beverly Auto Service at 1817 W. 103rd st., as a handyman, said he alighted from the bus at 103rd st., and crossed the street to Trumbull Park where the youths were standing in the park and they immediately began throwing rocks at him.

He began to run, he said, and one of the rocks struck him in the center of his back knocking him to the pavement. While he was down, the boys all jumped upon him, kicking him on the legs, back, face, ribs.

When he was able to scramble to his feet, he ran to the nearest house and pounded on the door. Williamson explained that a woman came to the door and without opening it, told him to go away. When he shouted for her to call the police, she yelled back that she did not have a telephone.

By the time the police arrived, the boys, pursuing him, reached the porch and all of them began kicking and clawing at him again. At that point, a man looked out of the door and told all of them to get off his porch.

He also hollered to Williamson that the police had been called. The gang of boys then yelled back that if he let Williamson in his house, they would break out all of his windows.

By that time, Williamson stated, the youngsters had vanished.

Police later picked up two lads but because of the darkness and the large number in the gang, Williamson said he could not identify them as his assailants.

Williamson was treated at South Chicago hospital and then confined to his home for several days. His right hand was badly injured, he said, when one lad jumped on it while kicking him.

Police are still investigating the incident.

During the past two weeks, two Negro families, who said they could no longer bear the terror and violence in the community, moved out of the project. They are:

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dowdell who moved out of 10741 S. Yates on Jan. 10. and Mr. and Mrs. Lee Bogan of 10742 who left on Jan. 8.

During the past 2 1-2 years approximately 35 Negro families have moved into the project. There are 27 families left.

With the cut in police detail, Negro residents must use the squad cars to go to andf rom their jobs right on schedule or be delayed for at least a half hour. Squad cars take them to the bus and escort them to their homes from the bus line when they return from work in the evening or from a visit in town.

Negro Tenants To Use Streets In Trumbull Park

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 4-11-56

CHICAGO—Negro tenants in the Trumbull Park Homes Project will on or before April 1 "begin using the public streets in that area heretofore untraveled by them," according to a letter to Police Commissioner Timothy J. O'Connor from Willoughby Abner, President of the Chicago Branch of the National Association ofr the Advancement of Colored People.

"The NAAC recognizing that this is their legal right has no choice but to stand four-square behind them in the exercise of of its rights," said Abner in declaring that "it is the responsibility of the Police Department of the City of Chicago to protect Chicagoans in the exercise of their legal rights. The NAACP holds the Police Department and you as its head to this responsibility."

Abner pointed out to the Police Commissioner that if he followed through on his commitment of last October "to open certain streets in the Trumbull ark Area and to sit down with the Negro tenants and work out a plan of increased mobility, we would not be faced with this precise situation today"

Abner added, "nor would Mr. Robert Williamson have been brutally attacked by the hoodlums in the area while using Oglesby (the back street to the project) on his way home from work."

"It is my sincere hope that it is not too late," wrote Abner to O'Connor, "to implement the prior agreement for planned increased mobility for the Negro residents of the Trumbull Park Project." and added that "in any event, the responsibility of the Police Department, yourself, as its Commissioner, and the Mayor of Chicago is clear and unmistakable in protecting the rights of citizens to walk the public streets of Chicago."

Copies of the communication to Commissioner O'Connor were sent to Mayor Daley and to Alderman Harvey, Metcalfe, Holman, Despres, Jones and Campbell.

See Another Trumbull Park In Chicago's Euclid Park

Defender P. 16 Chicago Ill

Unless Chicago officials and residents of the Euclid Park community evolve a concrete plan for improving race relation in the area, the city soon may be faced with another Trumbull Park situation.

The community, situated near the Princeton Park housing development, has been the scene of spasmodic outbreaks of racist acts since Negroes first became residents some three years ago.

38c

The incidents follow in many respects those of Trumbull Park. The main difference in Euclid Park is that the residents are property owners.

Attention has been focused on the community in the last few weeks because of several vandalistic acts which have seen one family abandon their home and others suffer damage to their property.

The situation has reached such propositions that Captain William Hennessey of the Gresham police district which covers the area has taken several steps to improve relations.

The police official has assigned a squad of police to patrol the area and a one-man detail has been stationed at 9543 Lowe ave., the home of Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Harmon and son. The Harmon family fled the site almost two weeks ago after a "concrete object" was thrown through a front porch window. This act followed a series of others which included the setting afire of a wooden unit on the rear of the property.

The situation came to a head earlier this week when vandals, riding fast moving autos, went on a rampage and smashed windows in about a dozen autos parked outside the homes of Negroes.

Some officers said that this was not a racist act; however, this was disputed by colored persons who said only their cars were damaged. Autos belonging to white residents, which were parked along with those of Negroes, were not touched, according to the Negroes.

An auto, reported stolen last Sunday, was found abandoned Monday night. Identified as one of the autos used in the vandalistic acts, the auto was found damaged and containing bricks like those near the scene of the incidents.

When interviewed by a Defender reporter residents of the community said the racist acts occur during the warm weather. Asked what form these acts take, they said teenagers will ride by their homes and shout derogatory names at them.

This, the residents said they could take. What disturbs them is the homemade bombs which are tossed at them. They described these bombs as being made of gasoline, kerosene and a lighted fuse. The bombs are tossed at their homes and explode when they land, they say.

One housewife said nights are nightmares. She asserted the disturbances start about midnight and last until around 4 a. m. She said her main fear is that a homemade bomb might explode and set her home afire before she can put it out.

Def. 4-14-56

Mrs. Robert Bush, of 9614 Normal, said efforts of the Commission on Human Relations, Catholic Interracial Council and the American Federation of Churches to improve relations have not been too effective.

An interesting sidelight to the incidents is that the families move about the streets free of trouble. Mr. and Mrs. Bush said their children attend school without any incidents.

This is in contrast to Trumbull Park where colored residents rarely venture outside public housing project. And their children are subject to insults and harassments.

Despite the racism which now faces Euclid Park residents, the consensus is that none will move away. This is understandable when you are told that most Negroes helped construct their homes.

Commenting on this, one resident said:

"I may be forced to send my family away, but I will never leave. My wife and I spent many hours working on our home to leave it."

TRUMBULL PARK HELD QUIETEST SINCE JULY, 1953

Daily Tribune Sat. 5-31-58

Police Commissioner O'Connor said yesterday the situation at Trumbull Park homes, 106th st. and Bensley av., now is the best since racial disturbances broke out there in July, 1953.

Chicago Ill.

Currently only 93 policemen are detailed there, he said. There were 250 detailed at the project most of last year. At one time, shortly after the outbreak, there were 1,200 policemen in the area. About 600 men were there during the last half of 1953.

There are 35 Negro families in the project. Some residents still ask police escorts when they arrive or depart, O'Connor said.

Housing Speakers Suggest Boycotting Areas That Are Segregated; Seeing Owners

Bystander Des Moines, Iowa Thurs. 11-8-56

NAACP workshops at the recent seventeenth annual session of Iowa State Conference of Branches featured speakers on the subject of "Improved Housing for Minorities," with Dr. Robert Johnson as moderator.

"Usually when we speak of 'segregated' housing, we think of only how it affects minority groups, but I don't think that this is the case in housing," spoke Mrs. Rose Mary Bruner, member of the Voluntary Housing Committee." Here the white community also is segregated and suffers from it.

"Where in the city of Des Moines can a white family move so their children can have a good interracial experience?" Mrs. Bruner queried as she listed a number of areas which are considered as blighted areas of the city.

'What's Wrong?'

"What's wrong with these areas? We all know—run down schools, lack of recreational facilities; in some cases, no sewer or water, ramshackle houses.

"In other words, generally blighted and undesirable areas for anyone."

The speaker informed that "we tried one of these areas when we first moved to Des Moines because we felt it was important for our child to have the opportunity of playing and living with children of other races but after a year, we moved from the area for the same reasons that any of you who live in these neighborhoods want to move."

Want Democratic Living

"There are many families who want their children to have good experiences in democratic living and they, like we, discover that it is impossible," Mrs. Bruner stated.

She stated that "it is impossible" because "segregated housing is profitable business for real estate men."

Mrs. Bruner explained to the conference that "as soon as a community grows, housing areas move farther and farther to the edge of the community.

"Thus the housing closest to the hub of the city becomes the least desirable because it is old, usually has less yard space, and is now located in an area that is zoned commercial—in other words, not very desirable for raising families.

"If the property is not wanted for industrial or commercial sites there is critically no market for it. Therefore, a market is artificially created by refusing homes to minorities in strictly residential areas.

Market Created

Thurs. 11-8-56

"Soon," the speaker continued, "not only is a market created but it also becomes a good market, because there are many competing for few homes at prices higher than the same housing would bring anywhere else in the community, and by maintaining segregated housing, a constant market is kept."

In a solution to the housing problem, Mrs. Bruner suggested that "we follow the example set in Montgomery, Ala. We boycott. We will refuse to buy from any realtor or into any neighborhood that segregates. We will refuse to sell through any realtor who favors or practices segregation."

The speaker said "this type of thing has been done in other communities," informing the a group in Philadelphia has formed a code of their housing practices and a Declaration of Intentions was published with 875 signatures in the Friends Journal.

"A similar declaration has appeared in the Champaign, Urbana, (Ill.) papers, and in one city a real estate agency was establishd by a group of like-minded citizens to deal with the problem.

"We must not let Des Moines and Iowa lag in this area. The problem is ours and only we can solve it," Mrs. Bruner said.

Mr. Harris Speaks

Edward Harris, supervisor, Iowa Children's Home Society, in his message, stressed "that segment of the Negro population in Des Moines who want housing suited to their particular convenience — and — consistent with their needs, their tastes, their ambitions and their abiilties to pay.

These individuals, Mr. Harris pointed out, "are continually confronted with the same old cliches—'you wouldn't be happy in that neighborhood,' 'there are no Negroes in that block,' and 'I'm sure you want to live with your own people,' or, 'if you will hold off we are going to have a new area opening up soon.'

'Heard Them All'

"I am sure that all of you recognize these as having their origin with real estate persons and not home owners or sellers," said Mr. Harris, who added, "I know because I have heard them all."

Harris presented the following suggestions to Negro families who want improved housing, suited to their particular conveniences:

"First, it will do Negroes no good to contact any of the real estate professions. They can't help them under their present 'code of ethics.' This code does not apply to the needs of Negroes.

"Second, Negroes will be eventually contacted by real estate men who perhaps will offer them a home in a 'new area that has just opened.' This is one where despite everything the real estate professions could do, a Negro family has gotten into a previously all white block. Negroes should resist the urge to accept homes in such areas, since this is only an effort to perpetuate Negro areas, discrimination and confinement.

"Third, that Negroes direct their efforts towards the independent seller, who is interested in selling his home at a fair price.

"Fourth, that when a Negro family is interested in buying, it should realistically evaluate its resources, consider homes consistent with its resources, approach only the owner, and not as someone looking for a cheap house, but as one willing to play fair and pay a fair price."

Solution

As a solution to the problem, Harris said:

"Nothing will be acceptable to me short of the acknowledgement of my right to purchase real estate according to my needs and ability to pay, and the unrestricted opportunity to exercise that right."

Harris informed that a committee the NAACP is working to compile a list that will show families who want to sell their homes to Negroes and a list of prospective buyers.

"Already we have had a number of people who have phoned that they want to sell and a list will help bring buyer and seller together.

Other speakers on the housing panel were Albert H. Hall, president of the Des Moines Real Estate Board; Howard W. McKinney, American Friends Service Committee.

Annual D.M. Institute on Human Rights at Drake U., Public Forum Jan. 9 and 10

The annual Des Moines Institute on Human Rights will be held Monday and Tuesday, Jan. 9 and 10 on the Drake University campus.

Sponsored by the Des Moines Commission on Human Rights, with the cooperation of the National Conference of Christians and Jews and more than 25 other organizatioins, the institute is a public forum devoted to strengthening human relations in the community.

Dr. Irwin Sobel, department of economics, Washington University, St. Louis; Dr. Herman H. Long, immediate past president, National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials; and Dr. Ed. Olsen, National Conference of Christian and Jews, Chicago, will be among those providing outstanding leadership.

In addition to notable addresses, there will be ample opportunity for discussion at panel and workshop sessions.

Call for Elimination of Racial Bias in Areas of Housing and Employment

BY EVELYN SPRIGGS TURNER

"There has been a virtual revolution in this country within the last ten years culminating in the Supreme Court ruling of May 17, 1954, to end segregation in public schools," spoke Dr. Herman H. Long of Nashville, Tenn., Monday morning as he addressed the opening session of the two-day Institute on Human Relations.

Director of race relations department, Congregational Christian Churches, Dr. Long told the integrated group of about 50 persons assembled at Drake University Lounge that "A long-waiting national policy has emerged in clear and demanding perspective.

"The national policy of our democratic nation sanctions nothing less than the full and equal citizenship status of all its people, and considers odious to democratic and constitutional doctrine any form of public practice which makes a distinction."

Keynote speaker at the eleventh annual Des Moines Institute on Human Relations held at Drake Universitiy Monday and Tuesday was Dr. Herman H. Long of Nashville, Tenn, director of race relations department of Congregational Christian Churches, of the American Missionary Association, Fisk University and immediate past president of Natioinal Assocation of Intergroup Relations Officiails.

Healthy Sign

The opening session of the eleventh annual Human Relations institute was welcomed by Dr. Henry G. Harmon, president of Drake University, who pointed out that it was "a healthy sign" when members of mixed groups could meet and discuss their problems ratioinally with the aim to improve relationships.

James B. Morris, Sr., chairman of Des Moines Commission on Human Rights, called attention to existing conditions and practices in Des Moines, then introduced the keynote speaker, Dr. Long.

Keynote Speaker

DR. HERMAN H. LONG

Dr. Long warned against the defeatest attitude, especially on the part of the minoritiy, saying that "improvement suffered from defeatism."

"Only strong will and persistent effort on the part of individuals within and without the distinctive minorities would improve group relatons"

Provides Direction

Dr. Long said legislation provides direction for private and public practice. In declaring that employment and housing "were yet the most difficult areas," the speaker pointed out that the myths, stereotypes and false notions" responsible for group discrimination, though still persisting, have been proven groundless and are being torn apart for all to see.

"The job of building understanding and enlightment remains a paramount need," Dr. Long emphasized and added, "but the problem is being tackled on all fronts in the home and family, the school and the church."

Advised Churches

The speaker advised that churches to take " a more active, a more firm, and positive stand in leadership, shepherding the people in the practice of true brotherhood."

Panel Talks

In the panel discussion which followed his speech, Mrs. Jay E. Tone, Sr., representing the League of Women Voters and the United Nations Association, commented as follows:

"The housewife and mother has the greatest opportunity in the world to shape our dedmocracy into the true and beautiful policy that it should be. She is the first to set policy—bringing up the nation's children with fair-mindedness—guiding their attitudes, innately fair-minded, into wholesome outgoing fair-play."

James McDonnal, director of community service for the Des Moines Industrial Union Council, recommended a survey to be made in Des Moines similar to those made in other cities.

Hess T. Sears, assistant vice-president of the Equitable Life Insurance Company of Iowa, said that private business, still-lagging in its responsibilities to the community, should take postive, immediate action.

Dr. Curtis Page, English professor at Drake University, acted as moderator

Dr. Irvin Sobel, professor of economics at Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., opened the Monday afternoon lectures. Under the subject of "The Impact of Discrimination on Employment and Income," he told of the lag between job opportunities available to Negroes and the steadily improving educational qualifications which they have today.

Wilfred C. Leland, Jr., executive secretary of the Minnesota Fair Employment Practices Commission, at St. Paul, addressed the afternoon session on the subject of Promoting Merit Employment—Oversations of a Fair Employment Practices Commission."

Campaign in Iowa

He said: "I would like to see a campaign in Iowa to get a state fair employment practices law enacted. It would focus on this problem the attention of those who make employment policies in Iowa industry.

"It would bring to their attention the favorable experiences of those who have solved this problem and industry here would do likewise."

Leland said that under the Minnesota law, which became effective last July, the state will probably concentrate on fair employment practices in the suburban and smaller communities. Commissions already are operating under city ordinances at Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth.

Leland said that employers asking how to integrate Negroes into their organizations were told "just go ahead and hire and wait until they become acquainted with the other workers."

'Gap Maintained'

"I have never heard of anyone in Minnesota leavinig his job because a Negro was hired," he said. "We have told employers that if any problems did arise in this regard to call us in but none has yet found it necessary to do so."

"In general," Sobel said, "the Negro is barely standing still in his efforts to advance his positiion in Amercan life. He is not advancing education-wise. The gap between education and jobs is being maintained."

Sobel said this condition exists, in part, because white workers are advancing in jobs at a speed disproportionate to the Negroes because of discrimination.

"The Negro has to advance faster just to stand still," Sobel commented.

St. Louis, Mo.

"The Negro's income nationally is much lower—about 60 per cent that of whites and he has only about one chance to the white's three chances of getting a higher work classification"

Sobel told of studies on Negro discrimination made in St. Louis, Mo. The survey revealed that 57 per cent of those Negroes who were college-trained were working as machine-operators or in jobs with lower classifications.

Discrimination from the economic standpoint is bad, but even worse,

Sobel said, is the effect that such a practice has upon the personality of the individual who is discriminated against.

Group Discusses 'Racial Prejudice In Jobs'

One of the typical discussion groups during the eleventh annual Des Moines Institute on Human Relations was like this Monday afternoon workshop session, assembled at Drake University Lounge, which exchanged thoughts and facts on the subject of "Racial Prejudices in Jobs." At extreme left is Dr. Herman H. Long of Nashville, Tenn., director of the race relations department of the American Missionary Association. At extreme right (profile) is the discussion leader, C. J. Find Segregated Housing Is 'Crux' of Race Relation Problems in the North

The initial meeting of what is expected to be a permanent committee of citizens concerned with improving housing opportunities for minority groups was held Wednesday in the offices of the Des Moines Commission on Human Rights.

In explaining the purpose of the committee, Robert C. Sweet, Commission Secretary, declared that it was not the intention that the committee should serve in pushing integration in housing. He noted that in spite of a multiplicity of restrictive measures, a substantial degree of integration is already going on within the city.

Basic Objective

Sweet said, additionally, that the committee should not be primarily concerned with the speed at which further integration takes place.

The basic objective, he said, was that the problem be looked at thoroughly and objectively with the hope that through sound planning there may come increasing opportunities for minority group families and a greater understanding and acceptance of non-segregation throughout the city.

'The Crux'

Segregation in housing was described as "the crux of race relations problems in northern cities" because the physical separation it provides prevents the means of communication that are necessary for a vitalized community organization. Housing was also seen as an area in which the pace change has occurred much more slowly than in other phases of intergroup relations and as involving considerations not present in other aspects of the problem.

Further Consideration

While the committee made no decision on what action it might take, it did propose that further consideration be given to the following subjects:

1. Research projects concerned with determining attitudes toward, and experiences with integration.
2. Strengthening existing FHA and VA non-discriminatory policies within the state.
3. Providing opportunities for "grass roots" discussion of housing segregation.
4. Adoption of a non-discriminatory code to be observed uniformly by realtors, builders, and lenders.
5. Efforts directed toward stabilizing neighborhoods into which Negroes have recently moved.

Open-Occupancy

6. Possibilities for developing an open-occupancy housing project.
7. Inclusion of housing topics within a series of radio or TV educational programs.
8. Aiding religious institutions in their attempts to bring moral conviction to bear upon current problems.
9. Enactment or enabling legislation to make possible the existence of public housing in Des Moines.

The next meeting of the committee is scheduled for August.

White Man Who Protected Negro Tried On Charge of Dynamitin' Negro's Home

Little Rock, Ark

Fri. 11-16-56

Louisville, Ky.—State's Attorney A. Scott Hamilton has advised defense counsel that he will try Vernon Bown on Nov. 20 on the charge of dynamiting the home of a Negro couple, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew E. Wade IV, in June, 1954. The house still lies in ruins in a so-called white neighborhood in suburban Shively.

Bown is a white man who moved in with the Wades to help protect the family from violence by neighbors and hoodlums. He was indicted in September, 1954, during a grand jury session which Hamilton turned into an inquiry into the political beliefs and reading habits of white supporters of the Wades.

Hamilton told Harry S. McAlpin, local Negro leader and chief counsel for Bown, that he didn't have enough evidence to convict Bown but he had to try him anyway because a lot of people were asking why he had Bown indicted in the first place.

Last February, Police Chief Carl Heustis of Louisville testified that James I. Rone, the builder of the house, or his son was the chief suspect in the Wade bombing. The younger Rone has been a leader in the White Citizens Council, and was an incorporator of the WCC state organization. Heustis and Rones are among two dozen witnesses the defense is summoning for Bown's trial.

The prosecutor admitted to McAlpin that he couldn't convict Bown unless he was allowed to introduce evidence similar to that used at the sedition trial of Carl Branden in December, 1954. Braden is a white man who bought the house and transferred it to the Wades after they were unable to purchase the property themselves.

Hamilton obtained the conviction of Braden by introducing hundreds of books seized from his home and then having paid informers testify that only a Communist would have such books in his possession. Similar books were seized at Bown's home.

The prosecutor charged that the purchase and bombing of the house were part of a Communist plot to stir up racial strife and bring about a political revolution, leading to the overthrow of the government of Kentucky and the U. S. by force and violence. That was the basis for sedition and conspiracy indictments against Bown, Braden and his wife Anne, and four other white supporters of the Wades. Most of these charges are still pending.

During Braden's trial, anti-Negro feeling and the Red scare were raised to a high pitch in the community, resulting in a 15-year prison sentence and a $5,000 fine. Braden served eight months in jail and prison. Last June the Kentucky Court of Appeals reversed his conviction.

McAlpin said he will fight strenuously against the introduction of any material not pertaining directly to the bombing at Bown's trial. The defense attorney pointed out to Hamilton that a repetition of the Braden trial might do great harm to race relations in Louisville, where schools have just been desegrated and other forward steps taken.

Bown's attorneys have filed with the court sworn statements of three persons who said he was with them in Milwaukee at the exact moment the house was bombed. An electronics expert testified at Braden's trial that Bown's radio could have been used to set off the dynamite, but the battery would have died within half an hour after it was rigged to the explosive.

Other defense attorneysare Bishop C. Ewbank Tucker of the AME Zion Church, who is head of the Kentucky Bureau of Negro Affairs, and Robert W. Zollinger, noted criminal lawyer. Both represented Braden at his trial.

ed if Bown came to trail. Bown was charged with causing the explosing that wrecked Wade's home.

CONVICTED IN 1954

Braden, a former Louisville newspaper man, was convicted in December, 1954, of advocating sedition in connection with the blast He was given a 15-year prison term and fined $5,000.

However, his conviction was reversed by the court of appeals, Kentucky's highest tribunal, after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled only

7 Kentuckians Freed In Case Where Negro's Home Bombed

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.

Wed. 11-21-56

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 20 (AP) —Criminal Court Judge L. R. Curtis today dismissed all remaining indictments against Carl Braden and six others stemming from the bombing of a Negro electical contractor's home two years ago.

P. 10-A

The judge's ruling was made on a motion by commonwealth's attorney A. Scott Hamilton who had prosecuted Braden in connection with the 1954 explosion at the home of Andrew E. Wade IV.

The bombing was termed part of a plot to arouse racial antagonisms in order to achieve the political ends of communism.

Hamilton said he was asking for dismissal of all indictments because of a ruling earlier in the day by Judge Curtis which Hamilton said would prevent introduction of Communist theories as evidence of motive.

The judge ruled that any evidence of alleged membership in or related activities on the part of Vernon Bown would be excluded if the federal government could try persons for sedition.

The ruling was in the Steve Nelson case from Pennsylvania.

Hamilton said the state of Kentucky is unable to prosecute sedition and criminal syndicalism, "then it is useless to attempt to carve out of the whole picture some type of lesser offense to prosecute these defendants piecemeal for the sake of prosecution alone."

The others against whom indictments were dismissed were Braden's wife, Anne Braden; Larue Spiker; Louise Gilbert; I. O. Ford; Lewis Lubka and Bown. All were indicted for sedition except Lubka who was charged with damaging property to achieve a political end.

Judge L. R. Curtis dismissed indictments against former Newspaperman Carl Braden and six others.

P. 11

After the September 1954 Grand Jury investigation the blast at the home of Andrew E. Wade IV in a white neighborhood ,indictments were returned against seven persons.

Braden, Miss LaRue Spiker, Miss Louise Gilbert, I. O. Ford, Vernon W. Bown and Braden's wife, Mrs. Anne Braden, former Birmingham and Anniston newspaperwoman, were indicted for teaching or advocating sedition.

Bown was indicted for wilfully causing an explosion and contempt of court and Bown, Ford and Lewis Lubka were indicted for conspiring to damage property and to achieve a political end.

BRADEN HAD purchased a home for the electrical contractor in the all-white neighborhood.

The former newspaperman was convicted of teaching and advocating sedition in December 1954, and a criminal court jury fixed punishment at 15 years imprisonment and a $5000 fine.

Braden appealed the decision and the state court of appeals reversed it, basing its ruling on a U. S. Supreme Court decision in the Steven Nelson case of Pennsylvania.

That ruling held that state courts had no jurisdiction over cases involving sedition against the federal government.

Yesterday's dismissal came on a motion by Commonwealth's Atty. A. Scott Hamilton.

Hamilton said it would be difficult to establish a motive for the bombing unless he could go into the political activities of the defendants.

Charges Against Seven Louisville Defendants In Bombing Dismissed

Louisville, Ky.—Sedition, conspiracy, contempt, and bombing charges against seven persons were dismissed by Judge L. R. Curtis of Criminal Court Tuesday at the request of State's Attorney A. Scott Hamilton.

The prosecutor asked for dismissal of all charges after Curtis refused to allow him to introduce allegedly subversive books as evidence against Vernon Brown, who was scheduled to be tried on the charge of dynamiting a Negro's home in June, 1954 Harry S. McAlpin local Negro leader and chief counsel for Bown, had objected to the use of any evidence not directly connected with the explosion.

Hamilton had admitted he couldn't convict Bown unless he was allowed to use books and papers seized in two raids on Bown's home, both without search warrents. The prosecutor said he didn't have enough evidence to convict Bown of the bombing. McAlpin had filed sworn statements of three persons who said Bown was with them in Milwaukee when the house blew up.

Bown is a white truck driver who moved in with the Negroes, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew E. Wade IV, to protect the family against violence. He and six other white supporters of the Wades were indicted in September, 1954. The others included Carl and Anne Braden, journalists, who had bought the house in a previously all-white neighborhood and transferred it to the Wades.

Hamilton charged that the purchase and bombing of the house were part of a Communist plot to stir up racial strife and bring about a political revolution that would lead to the overthrow of of the government of the U. S. and Kentucky by force and violence. An old state sedition law was used for the first time.

Bown, the Bradens, and two others were charged with conspiring to dynamite the house, while Bown was accused of the actual bombing. Four of the conspiracy defendants and two other persons were charged with sedition. Bown was also accused of contempt of court.

Braden was sentenced to 15 years in prison and fined $5,000 in the sedition charge after a 13-day trial in December, 1954. Hamilton introduced hundreds of books and private papers seized in two raids on the Braden home. Paid informers testified that some of the books could have been found only in the possession of a Communist Party member. The head of the public library testified that he had many of them on his shelves. Similar books were found at Bown's home.

Last June the Kentucky Court of Appeals threw out Braden's conviction. This also affected the sedition, conspiracy, and contempt charges against the others, as well as the conspiracy charge remaining against Braden.

Other defendants were Miss Louise Gilbert and Miss LaRue Spiker, social worker; Lewis Lubka, former union stewart, and I. captain. Ford spent 6 months in O. Ford, 82, retired riverboat jail, Bown 5 months, and Braden 8 months as a result of high bail bonds. Bradens was $40,000.

Other defense attorneys included Bishop C. Ewbank Tucker of the AME Zion church; Grover G. Sales, an attorney in Kentucky for the American Civil Liberties Union, and Robert W. Zollinger and George Ambro, criminal lawyers. Louis Lusky, another ACLU attorney here, was an attorney for Braden on appeal. Leonard Boudin New York, general counsal for the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee acted in an advisory capacity throughout the case. Other attorneys in New York, Chicago, and Milwaukee also took part in the defense.

Wade, an electrical contractor, is still engaged in a court fight over the ownership of the $11,300 house, which still lies in ruins. Damage amounted to $5,500.

Ky Negroes File Suit For Unsegregated Public Housing

LOUISVILLE, KY - Eleven Negroes brought suit in the Federal District Court of Western Kentucky last week against the Louisville Municipal Housing Commission demanding a permanent injunction to keep the Housing Commission from enforcing a policy of discrimination in municipally operated housing projects.

Citing the due process and equal protection clauses of the 14th Amendment, and certain sections of the US Housing Act of 1937, the suit named the Municipal Housing Commission and ach member separately.

Contending that they have made application to and are eligible for admission to public housing units, the plaintiffs state that they have been denied admission to certain public housing solely because of race and color.

The plaintiffs maintain that the Housing Commission, acting under the statutes of Kentucky and the customs and usages of Kentucky, have adopted and thereby practices a policy of segregation and discrimination against them and against all Negroes.

The persons binging suit said that they have been awaiting admission to public housing for a long time because of the fewer vacancies in the projects limited to Negroes than those in the projects limited to whites, and that Negroes were not being placed in the white projects or vice versa.

They stated that the Commission maintains a strict neighborhood pattern policy in that same racial composition which exists in each neighborhood by the selection of housing projects.

According to J Earl Dearing, the attorney for the plaintiffs, the Louisville suit has its basis in decisions handed down by Federal Courts in Detroit, Mich, in 1953, and California in 1955.

7 Freed in Bombing Of Negro Home in 1954

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 20 (AP)—Criminal Court Judge L. R. Curtis today dismissed all remaining indictments against Carl Braden and six others stemming from the 1954 bombing of a Negro electrical contractor's home.

The judge's ruling was made on a motion by commonwealth's attorney A. Scott Hamilton, who had prosecuted Braden in connection with the explosion at the home of Andrew E. Wade IV.

The bombing was termed part of a plot to arouse racial antagonisms in order to achieve the political ends of communism.

Hamilton said he was asking for dismissal of all indictments because of a ruling earlier in the day by Judge Curtis which Hamilton said would prevent introduction of Communist theories as evidence of motive.

The judge ruled that any evidence of alleged membership in the Communist Party, sedition or related activities on the part of Vernon Bown would be excluded if Bown came to trial. Bowen was charged with causing the explosion that wrecked Wade's home.

Braden, a former Louisville newspaperman, was convicted in December, 1954, of advocating sedition in connection with the blast. He was given a 15-year prison term and fined $5000.

However, his conviction was reversed by the Court of Appeals after the United States Supreme Court ruled only the Federal Government could try persons for sedition.

Racial Bombing Case Dismissed

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 21 (AP)—Criminal Court Judge L. R. Curtis has dismissed all remaining indictments against Carl Braden and six others stemming from the bombing of a Negro electrical contractor's home two years ago.

The judge's ruling was made yesterday on a motion by Commonwealth's Attorney A. Scott Hamilton, who had prosecuted Braden in connection with the 1954 explosion at the home of Andrew E. Wade IV.

The bombing was termed part of a plot to arouse racial antagonisms in order to achieve the political ends of communism.

Mr. Hamilton said he was asking for dismissal of all indictments because of a ruling earlier in the day by Judge Curtis which Mr. Hamilton said would prevent introduction of Communist theories as evidence of motive.

Communist Evidence Barred

The judge ruled that any evidence of alleged membership in the Communist Party, sedition or related activities on the part of Vernon Bown would be excluded if Bown came to trial. Bown was charged with causing the explosion that wrecked Mr. Wade's home.

Braden, a former Louisville newspaperman, was convicted in December, 1954, of advocating sedition in connection with the blast. He was given a 15-year prison term and fined $5,000.

However, his conviction was reversed by the Court of Appeals, Kentucky's highest tribunal, after the United States Supreme Court ruled only the Federal Government could try persons for sedition.

Other Defendants Listed

The ruling was in the Steve Nelson case from Pennsylvania.

The others against whom indictments were dismissed were Braden's wife, Anne Braden; Larue Spiker, Louise Gilbert, I. O. Ford; Lewis Lubka and Bown. All were indicted for sedition, except Lubka, who was charged with damaging property to achieve a political end.

Housing Commission Challenges Bias Suit

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — (ANP) — The Louisville Municipal Housing Commission, a public housing projects agency, announced last week it has hired an Attorney to challenge a racial discrimination suit filed against it by 12 Negro families.

The lawsuit was filed against the commission Nov. 7 by attorney Earl Dearing in behalf of the families.

Housing Commission Chairman Mrs. Elsie Ahrens Lang said that commission's "segregation policy has been fixed from the beginning."

Leo T. Wolfard to contest the action of the Negro families.

The Housing commission hired Homes the Sheppard Square homes, College Court projects and land that has been acquired for another project.

Housing Agency Denies Negroes' Allegations

Courier Journal
P 1 Section 2 38c
Ky

The Municipal Housing Commission has filed in Federal Court a denial of allegations that it practices segregation and discrimination in the City's public-housing projects.

Twelve Negroes in a suit filed November 7 had alleged the commission denied them entrance to white housing projects that had vacancies, in violation of their civil rights.

The M.H.C. answer says none of the 12 plaintiffs are eligible for public housing: five have leased public-housing units, two are ineligible because they are unemployed, four others have been offered units but have subsequently become ineligible, and one has turned down a unit because of the location.

Discrimination Denied

The answer holds that Federal Court lacks jurisdiction because none of the 12 plaintiffs are eligible for housing.

The commission further denied it practiced a policy of discrimination. "The operation of these low-rent public-housing projects has been accomplished without any discrimination whatsoever against Negroes," the answer says. "Although the Negro population of Louisville is approximately 16 per cent of the total population, units in public-housing projects now occupied by Negro families total 2,006 and units now occupied by white families now total 2,503."

Negro housing projects listed are Beecher Terrace, 808 units; Sheppard Square, 423 units; College Court, 125 units, and Cotter Homes, 650 units.

White projects are Clarksdale, 786 units; Parkway Place, 653 units; Iroquois Homes, 854 units, and LaSalle Place, 210 units.

In denying that it practiced a policy of segregation in violation of the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution, the commission said:

"The defendants contend that the method used by them has not simply followed a 'separate-but-equal theory', but that the Negro families have been located on a voluntary basis, which has proved to be a satisfactory method of operation, and this is the only possible realistic arrangement that can be made."

Says Separation Preferred

The commission contended that both white and Negro families have preferred to be separated and that there had been no complaints until the November 7 suit was filed.

Attorney for the 12 Negro plaintiffs, J. Earl Dearing, said no date had been set for a hearing on the suit.

Back Braden's Guilt, State Urges Court

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky. Sun. 4-17-56

Aide Says Case Has Same Position As Before State-Sedition-Law Ruling

The Commonwealth yesterday asked the Court of Appeals to uphold Carl Braden's conviction on a State charge of advocating sedition.

The United States Supreme Court held April 2 that the Federal Government has pre-empted the field of prosecution for sedition from the states. But Assistant Attorney General Robert F. Matthews, Jr., said yesterday:

"Officially, Braden is still in the same position" that he has been in since his conviction in December, 1954; that is, his appeal—submitted to the Court of Appeals—must be disposed of by that court.

38c

Given 15 Years

After a two-week trial, Louisvillian Braden was given a 15-year sentence and ordered to pay a $5,000 fine. The former newspaperman was released from LaGrange Penitentiary last July under $40,000 appeal bond.

Matthews said the filing of the 129-page Commonwealth brief yesterday was normal procedure in answering Braden's appeal brief filed last December 10.

The Supreme Court's April 2 ruling stemmed from the conviction of Steve Nelson, Pittsburgh Communist, under a Pennsylvania antisedition statute similar to Kentucky's law.

Danger of Conflict

The Supreme Court said the enforcement of State sedition acts "presents a serious danger of conflict with the administration of the federal program."

Matthews said he was sure the Supeme Court's decision would have "great weight" with the Court of Appeals in its thinking on the Braden case.

"But whether it (the Supreme Court ruling) is controlling here or not—the Court of Appeals will have to decide that," Matthews said.

Will Ask Rehearing

In addition, Matthews said it is his understanding that Pennsylvania will ask the Supreme Court for a rehearing of the Nelson case. Thus, he said, it is possible the Supreme Court might reverse its stand.

Attached to the brief filed yesterday were the names of Matthews, Attorney General Jo M. Ferguson, A. Scott Hamilton, Commonwealth's attorney here who prosecuted Braden, and Hamilton's assistants, Carl T. Ousley and Laurence E. Higgins.

Denies Braden's Arguments

Under eight separate subject headings, the State's appeal brief denies all the arguments made in Braden's 330-page brief.

On the question of federal precedence, the Commonwealth's brief does not mention the Supreme Court ruling, but asserts:

"Federal legislation in the field of sedition has not preempted State's rights nor superseded the Kentucky statute."

In referring to this point, Matthews said:

"Reference to the Supreme Court ruling in the Nelson case was omitted because our brief already was in the hands of the printer when the decision was handed down."

Matthews said the Commonwealth "in all probability will file a supplementary brief" as to the effect of the Nelson case ruling on Kentucky.

The seven other denials of arguments contained in the defense brief are:

1. Constitutionally, the defendant was not entitled to a directed acquittal.

Braden's brief contended that he should have been given a directed verdict of acquittal because the State and U. S. constitutions forbid the imputation of guilt by association. There was no evidence, the defense brief said, of unlawful purpose in either Braden's alleged membership in the Communist Party or in his possession and circulation of literature.

The Commonwealth said: "... in view of the fact that the defendant was a C. P. (Communist Party) member, the necessary criminal intent . . . can be inferred by the jury from the very fact that he was a C. P. member. Being such, he was dedicated to the violent overthrow of the Government."

Cites New York Trial

Braden's attorneys also said he was entitled to a directed acquittal because the State and U. S. Constitutions forbid punishment for speech, writing, and assembly that do not create a "clear and present danger."

The Commonwealth said: "To say there is no clear and present danger in the Communist conspiracy is to argue abstractly with no basis in fact. . . . In the celebrated trial of Dennis and other Communists in New York, Judge Medina held as a matter of law that there was a clear and present danger to justify the suppression of this Communist conspiracy."

Courier-Journal

'Desegregation Not Issue'

2. Desegregation is not an issue in this case.

Braden's attorneys contended he also was entitled to a directed verdict of acquittal because the Kentucky sedition law does not forbid controversial action in the field of segregation.

Braden's indictment grew out of a grand-jury investigation of the June 27, 1954, dynamiting of the home of Andrew Wade, IV, on Rone Court. Braden and his wife, Mrs. Anne Braden, a white couple, had purchased the house in an all-white neighborhood and later transferred it to Wade, a Negro.

Commonwealth's Attorney Hamilton contended at that time that Braden's purchase of the home, his transfer of it to Wade, and the subsequent dynamiting were all part of a Communist plot engineered by Braden and others to stir up racial trouble.

'Strictly Sedition'

In its brief, the Commonwealth said: "There is no question but that this is strictly a sedition case . . . Andrew Wade's being a Negro is important only when tied in with the fact that Communists attempt to use racial issues in furtherance of the Communist plan."

3. An indictment which follows the language of the statute is valid.

The defense alleged the indictment was illegal because it did not detail the offenses of which Braden was accused, but simply followed the wording of the sedition statute.

4. The searches made of the defendants home and seizures that followed were legal.

In his appeal brief, Braden's attorneys contended that search warrents were not properly obtained.

Says Judge Erred

5. The integrity of the seized documents was not compromised.

Braden's brief said books and papers taken from Braden's home were mixed up with some seized from other persons also indicted but not yet tried.

6. No prejudicial errors were committed by the court in the admission or exclusion of evidence.

The defense allegation was that Trial Judge L. R. Curtis erred in many instances, especially in allowing Braden's political opinions to be "explored."

7. The instructions given the jury followed the wording of the statute and therefore were not erroneous.

The defense contended that Judge Curtis' instructions were "prejudicially erroneous, and so applied the statute as to render it unconstitutional."

The Commonwealth's brief concluded:

"There is no question but that Carl Braden had a fair trial and the evidence supported the verdict of the jury."

Carl Braden's Conviction Is Reversed

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky. Sat. 6-23-56

Nelson Case Basis Of Sedition Ruling

The Kentucky Court of Appeals at Frankfort yesterday reversed the conviction of Carl Braden on a charge of advocating sedition against the United States and the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

38c

In an opinion only three pages long—in contrast to the mountainous record that went to Frankfort with Braden's appeal—the court held that "there is no logical way to distinguish the Braden case from the Nelson case."

In the Nelson case—involving Communist Steve Nelson, Pittsburgh—the U. S. Supreme Court ruled April 2 that the States have no jurisdiction over sedition against the Federal Government.

Convicted In 1954

Braden was convicted in December, 1954, after a 13-day trial. He was sentenced to 15 years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

It was Braden's appeal of that conviction that was ruled on yesterday.

Although the high court knocked out Braden's conviction, it held that the State can prosecute Braden for sedition against the State alone.

Judge Porter Sims, who wrote the unanimous opinion, said on this point:

"To be certain of making ourselves clear, we now state that this opinion does not foreclose the possibility of prosecution for the crime of sedition directed exclusively against the Commonwealth of Kentucky."

Follows Nelson Ruling

That followed the ruling of the Supreme Court in the Nelson case.

The Court of Appeals opinion did not touch on any other issues raised in Braden's appeal. These included allegations that the indictment was faulty, that the trial judge's charge to the jury was prejudicial, and that certain of Braden's civil rights had been violated.

State Attorney General Jo M. Ferguson said yesterday he and Commonwealth's Attorney A. Scott Hamilton—who directed Braden's prosecution here—will study the opinion carefully.

This study, according to Ferguson, will be made with an eye toward the possibilities of:

1. Asking the Appellate Court to reconsider its decision on Braden.

2. Proceeding against Braden in Criminal Court here on a charge of committing sedition against the Commonwealth alone.

Courier-Journal

Remainder Still on Books

If the latter course should be decided on, Ferguson said, Braden would have to be retried.

Ferguson said he believed that no change in the law would be necessary for a retrial because—while the portion of the State law covering sedition against the Federal Government has been knocked out—"the remainder of the law is still on the books."

Ferguson said it "is very unlikely" that he would ask for a rehearing by the court. However, he said:

Sat. 6-23-56

"I am gratified with the statement of the court upholding the right of the State to prosecute for sedition against Kentucky alone."

p. 12

Ferguson said he and Hamilton would probably reach a decision by "the latter part of next week."

May Issue Mandate

If a rehearing is not asked, the court will issue a mandate to Criminal Court here, where Braden was tried, according to Ferguson.

The mandate, according to the attorney general, would order Judge L. R. Curtis to free Braden and dismiss the indictment on which he was tried.

The Braden case stemmed from an explosion at the home of Andrew Wade, IV, a Negro for whom Braden bought a home in a white subdivision near Shively.

Braden was freed on $40,000 appeal bond last July after serving seven months in the jail in the State Reformatory near LaGrange.

The blast hit the Wade home nearly two years ago—early in the morning of June 27, 1954.

A grandjury that investigated the case three months later indicted Braden and six other persons, including Braden's wife, Anne, on sedition or related charges.

38c

Commonwealth's Attorney Hamilton contended that the property transfer was part of a plot to stir up trouble between whites and Negroes here—to further communism.

Besides Braden and his wife, others indicted were:

Miss Larue Spiker, Crestwood; Miss Louise Gilbert, now living in Philadelphia; Lewis Lubka, now living in New York; Vernon Bown, and I. O. Ford. All are free on bond.

Lubka Charge Different

Lubka was not charged with sedition as such, but with conspiring to damage property to achieve a political end—Communism. The others were charged with advocating sedition.

Braden, Mrs. Braden, Bown, Ford, and Lubka were also charged with conspiring to damage property for a political end.

In addition, Bown was charged with the actual explosion at the Wade home. He has submitted affidavits to show he was in Milwaukee when the blast went off.

Only Braden has been tried.

One Charge Involved

Ferguson said the Court of Appeals decision yesterday involved only the one charge on which Braden was tried, advocating sedition.

It does not affect the charge of conspiring to damage property, or any of the charges against the other persons.

The conspiracy charge against Braden and the charges against the others—with the exception of the "causing-an-explosion" count against Bown—all stem directly from the 1920 Kentucky sedition statute.

After the Supreme Court ruling in the Nelson case, Hamilton said these charges would probably be dismissed.

But yesterday Hamilton said that if it is decided to prosecute Braden further, the charges against the others might be kept alive, too.

The possibility of filing perjury charges against Braden will also be discussed, Hamilton said.

Louis Lusky, Louisville attorney who acted as cocounsel in Braden's appeal, said yesterday, "The American Civil Liberties Union views the reversal of Carl Braden's conviction as an important civil-liberties victory.

Braden Not Available

"The A.C.L.U. participated in the appeal by assigning me to serve as appellate cocounsel, because the conviction (and the Kentucky statute on which it was based) appeared to endanger basic rights and freedoms which mark the difference between our democratic system and totalitarian regimes. . . .

"These include the right to fundamentally fair procedure, such as specific accusations in criminal cases. They also include freedom for controversial viewpoints . . . so long as they are peaceably expressed."

After learning that his appeal was successful, Braden said:

"I hope this is the end of reprisals against my wife and me because of our sale of a house to a Negro family."

Wins Ky. appeal

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. 8-11-56

FRANKFORT, Ky. — The 15-year prison term and $5,000 fine imposed on Carl Braden for buying a house in a white neighborhood for a colored friend, was set aside Friday by the Kentucky Court of Appeals.

Braden, convicted under an ancient sedition law, was freed after the U.S. Supreme Court held April 2 that only the Federal Government has the power to prosecute sedition cases.

Free Braden Of Sedition In Wade Cases

Defender 8/18 Chicago, Ill. Sat. 8-11-56

FRANKFORT, Ky. — The Kentucky Court of Appeals has thrown out the 15-year prison sentence of Carl Braden, who was convicted of violation of the state's sedition laws after helping a Negro couple obtain a house in a white neighborhood.

Braden, his wife and five other white persons were charged after the house, sold to Andrew Wade IV, was dynamited on June 27, 1954. It is expected that charges against the other six persons will be dropped.

The Appeals court, refusing to pass on civil liberties issues raised by attorneys for Braden, based its ruling on a decision by the U. S. Supreme court that the federal government has exclusive right to prosecute sedition cases.

Kentucky Attorney General Jo M. Ferguson said it was not likely that he would ask the appeals court to rehear the Braden case. Braden spent seven months in jail and prison before bail was raised for him by the Emergency Civil Liberties committee.

Louis Lusky, civil liberties lawyer, who assisted in the appeal, said he viewed the court's ruling as an "important civil liberties victory."

There has been no prosecution in the actual bombing, although Vernon Brown, a friend of the Wades, was charged. However, three witnesses have declared that Brown was in Milwaukee at the time of the explosion.

Court Of Appeals Kills Case Against Braden

World Sat. 6-30-56 P.4 Birm., Ala.

FRANKFORT, Ky. — The Kentucky Court of Appeals has thrown out the 15-year prison sentence given Carl Braden because he and his wife helped a Negro couple obtain a house in a so-called white neighborhood near Louisville.

Charges against Mrs. Braden and five other whites persons indicted with the Bradens are expected to be voided as a result of the unanimous decision by Kentucky's highest court. All were indicted under a sedition law passed in 1920.

"The American Civil Liberties Union views the reversal of Carl Braden's conviction as an important civil liberties victory," said Lous Lusky, Louisville attorney who was appointed by the A C L U to assist in appealing the conviction.

The Appeals Court did not pass on many important civil liberties issues raised in a 330-page appeal brief filed by Lusky and Robert W. Zollinger, Louisville, who was Braden's chief counsel at his trial in December, 1954. The high court's decision was based, instead, on a ruling by the U S Supreme Court that the Federal Government has exclusive right to prosecute for alleged sedition.

Braden and the others were indicted on sedition charges after a grand jury investigated the dynamiting of the home of the Negro couple, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew E. Wade IV, on June 27, 1954. The house was half destroyed by white racists after the Bradens bought the house and transferred it to the Wades.

Commonwealth's Attorney A. Scott Hamilton, who prosecuted the case, declared that the purchase and bombing of the house were plotted by white supporters of the Wades in order to stir up racial strife and bring about a political revolution.

Vernon Bown, who had moved into the Wade home to protect Mrs. Wade and her small daughter from violence by hoodlums, was charged with the actual dynamiting. Three persons recently filed sworn statements in court at Louisville stating that Bown was with them in Milwaukee at the time of the explosion and for several hours before it happened.

Hamilton and State Attorney General Jo M. Ferguson had asked the Appeals Court to uphold Braden's conviction on the ground that he was guilty of sedition against the state as well as the Federal Government. They urged the Kentucky judges to interpose their authority between the Supreme Court and the citizens of Kentucky to keep the Supreme Court decision from being applied in the Braden case.

They said the Court of Appeals of Kentucky "is a supreme in its own field as the Supreme Court of the United States." They declared the Kentucky court "would be remiss in its duty if it accorded a broad interpretation to limitations on State power established by the Supreme Court, if those limitations were contrary to the view of the law entertained by this Court."

The Appeals Court decision implied rejection of the plea for interposition, but it did emphasize that it was not ruling out the possibility of State prosecution for offenses against the State. It said: "To be certain of making ourselves clear, we now state this opinion does not foreclose the possibility of prosecution of the crime of sedition directed exclusively against the Commonwealth of Kentucky."

Ferguson said he welcomed this passage in the opinion and would study the possibility of prosecuting Braden and the others for sedition against Kentucky alone. Braden told reporters: "I hope this is the end of reprisals against my wife and me because of our sale of a house to a Negro couple."

The attorney general said it was not likely that he would ask the Appeals Court to rehear the Braden case. Attorney Zollinger said it would be 30 to 60 days before the high court's ruling becomes final. When it is finalized, the Louisville court will release the $40,000 posted as bond for Braden to assure his freedom while the appeal was pending. Braden spent seven months in jail and prison before the money was raised, much of it through the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee. The bond was the highest ever set in Kentucky for any offense.

Zollinger said he would ask the Appeals Court to release hundreds of books and private papers seized in raids on the homes of the Bradens and the others indicted. The searches and seizures were one of the main points raised in Lusky and Zollinger's brief. It was one of the many issues that rallied wde support for the Louisville defendants. Besides the Bradens and Bown, those indicted were Lewis Lubka, Miss Louise Gilbert, Miss LaRue Spiker, and I. O. Ford.

"All the defendants jom me in thanking the thousands of individuals, organizations, and newspapers all over the world that made it possible for us to carry this case to the highest courts and obtain justice," Braden said. "Labor unions, church organizations, and student groups were particularly helpful. Of course, the main work was done by civil liberties organizations."

Court again voids Braden conviction

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 8-11-56

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Carl Braden of Louisville, convicted of sedition against the United States and Kentucky in 1954, finally has succeeded in getting the courts to dismiss the indictments.

The case began in July, 1954 when Braden bought a house for a colored man, Andrew Wade 4th, in a white neighborhood. The house was bombed on July 27, 1954.

INDICTMENTS were returned against Braden and his wife and four others, charging the purchase of the house was a plot to advance communism by stirring up trouble between the races.

He was tried and convicted on the sedition charges, fined $5,000 and sentenced to 15 years in prison. The case of the others is still pending in the lower courts.

THE COURT OF Appeals reversed the decision of the Jefferson Circuit Court on June 22 in line with the opinion delivered by the Supreme Court on April 2 which stated:

States have no jurisdiction over sedition against the United States.

Commonwealth Attorney A. Scott Hamilton had until Friday before last to file for a rehearing. The mandate of the Jefferson court became automatic when he failed to meet the deadline.

'We are staying!' says besieged family

BALTIMORE,

"We're staying. If we run now we will be running the rest of our lives."

That was the answer given Wednesday by Mrs. Lillie Ogleby to four attacks on the home which they purchased last week in the formerly all-white 400 block of E. 27th St., and letter threatening the lives of the family.

The threatening letter, received through the mail on Wednesday morning, was the latest development in the six-day reign of terror for the family since they moved into the house on Jan. 5.

* * *

IT FOLLOWED four attacks on the house in which all of the windows were broken out, a huge firecracker and a brick thrown through a living room window, and a homemade smoke bomb thrown against the house after heavy mesh wire was nailed over the replaced windows.

After the smoke bomb incident, Northern District Police Captain Clarence German assigned a police detail to guard the house in the evening and at night.

After assignment of the guard, Mrs. Oglesby said, there were no further incidents until the letter was received on Wednesday morning.

THE LETTER, crudely printed on cheap notepaper, read:

"The police will not protect you forever. As long as you live in that house, your life will be in danger. So will that lousy, stinking Jew."

The house was sold to the Oglebys by Milton Sommers, a W. Baltimore St. real estate man, who said that he had received several threatening telephone calls after selling the house to the family.

* * *

"THEY SAID," Mr. Sommers declared, "that they were going to 'get' me and that they would damage every house that I owned so that no one would want to live in them."

The Oglebys have five daughters, Barbara, 13; Joan, 12; Joyce, 10; Brenda, 8, and Betty,

The family said that none of them have been approached or molested.

"However," Mrs. Ogleby said, "I see to it that all of the girls are in the house before dark, because there is no telling what someone might try. But at any rate, we are going to stay right here."

BESEIGED HOME—The home of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Ogleby at 414 E. 27th St., has been under a virtual state of seige since the couple and their five children moved in on Jan. 5. After every window in the house was broken by vandals who objected to the colored family's moving into the formerly all-white block, the couple nailed heavy wire screens over all the windows as a safety measure.

County Maps Fight Discrimination Suit

The Prince Georges County Board of Commissioners has requested a bill of particulars in a suit charging the board with racial discrimination in denying a zoning application for a proposed Negro subdivision.

In a motion filed yesterday in Prince Georges Circuit Court, William L. Kahler, counsel to the commissioners, asked for names and addresses and the testimony of persons who spoke for the plaintiffs at the zoning hearing.

Attorney Harvey G. Machen, representing owners of some 126 acres near the Negro community of Glenarden, declared in the suit, filed November 4, that one county commissioner (not named) declared he would not recommend the site for a subdivision if it was to be developed for Negro housing. The land owners, listed in the suit are Mr. and Mrs. Lester M. Lewis, of 5131 Linnean terrace N.W., and Mr. and Mrs. Willard J. Hall, of 2745 Chesapeake street N.W.

Family believed non-white makes profit from near riot

Afro-American Sat. 4-14-56 P. 8

Baltimore, Md.

DETROIT—"You ought to tell your folks that there is a colored person moving in."

This statement, attributed to a laborer with a moving firm, touched off a near riot Wednesday in a northwest neighborhood here.

The laborer, according to Det. Ed Boggs of the Detroit Police Department's special investigation bureau, made this statement to a resident of the neighborhood.

BEFORE A night had passed about 500 people congregated about the property of the new resident. They made nasty remarks and hurled stones at the house, breaking two windows.

The victims of the abuse were the members of the family of John W. Rouse, a retired policeman.

He insists that his family, wife, daughter and two grandchildren are white.

BECAUSE OF the resentment of his neighbors, Rouse, 70, sold the property to the Belmont Sub-division Association for $18,500, a $2,000 profit.

Mrs. Rouse, also 70, cried: "How do they know we are colored?

"We didn't even get out here until after dark Tuesday. I think there is something very wrong. I could expect something like this in a foreign country."

DETECTIVE BOGGS said that he and Sgt. Thomas Nickerson attempted to trace the source of the rumor that set off the demonstration.

"As near as we can determine," said the detective, "it started with the movers.

"One of the workmen moving furniture into the house told a boy 'you ought to tell your folks there is a colored person moving in.'

"It apparently started from there," the detective said.

* * *

THE RUMOR evidently passed by word of mouth mostly from one agitated neighbor to another, the officer said.

The police said that both grandchildren were registered as white. Rouse said he is part Cherokee Indian and that his wife is Scotch-Irish and French Canadian.

Robson Street, where the demonstration occurred, is composed of small residences of no specific architecture. Many of the houses are in the 15-year-old class or older.

The Rouse family moved into the controversial home from a mixed neighborhood on American Ave.

Rumor Fires Racist Mob; Force Family To Quit Home

Chicago, Ill.

DETROIT—(ANP)—Racial prejudice and a rock-throwing mob of 500 persons won another victory Thursday as John W. Rouse bowed to his neighbors' belief that he and his family are Negroes.

Rouse, 70-year-old retired private policeman, insists hat he and the members of his family — wife, daughter and two grandchildren — are all white. He said he is part Cherokee Indian and his wife is Scotch-Irish and French Canadian.

The neighbors think otherwise. Although none admitted having seen or known the Rouse family, all said they knew they were Negroes.

Mrs. Rouse, also 70, said: "How do they know we are Negros. They haven't even seen us. We didn't even get here until after dark Tuesday. I think there is something very wrong. I could expect something like this in a foreign country."

While Mrs. Rouse talked, her husband was completing a deal with the Belmont Subdivision association to buy the house for $18,500, a $2,000 profit.

Two windows in the modest brick home were broken by rocks before police arrived and dispersed the mob which at one time numbered about 500.

Off and on all day, little children passed in front of the Rouse house giggling and occasionally yelling.

Large numbers of teenagers gathered in groups across the street from time to time while housewives sat on porches gossiping about the affair.

Two members of the special police bureau that deals with racial problems tried to trace the source of the rumor that set off the demonstration.

"As near as we can determine," said Detective Ed Boggs, "it started with the movers. One of the workmen moving furniture into the house told a boy, 'You ought to tell your folks there is a Negro moving in.' It apparently started from there."

The Rouse family moved to the northwest Detroit area from a mixed neighborhood on American avenue. The nearest non-white neighborhood is 3½ miles away.

Foreign leaders contradicts boastful Dearborn mayor

Afro-American P.16 Sat. 4-14-56 Baltimore, Md.

DEARBORN, Mich. — Mayor Orville Hubbard has spent two weeks ducking reporters from the AFRO-AMERICAN ever since March 28, when he boasted in an interview with the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser that he has been mayor 15 years because no colored people are permitted to reside in Dearborn.

"They can't get in here", Hubbard is quoted as saying.

"WE WATCH it. Everytime we hear of a colored person moving in — for instance, we had one last year— we respond quicker than you do to a fire.

"That's generally known. It's known among our own people and it's known among colored people here."

Hubbard was quoted as saying that the population of Dearborn double since 1950 by a large influx of Poles and Italians who were "crowded out of Detroit by the colored people coming in.

"These people are so anticolored — much more so than you in Alabama, if you took a vote on it."

DEARBORN HAS a population of 130,000 and is the state's fourth largest city. It is the home of Ford's River Rouge plant that employes at least 15,000 colored persons.

The AFRO in attempting to to verify Hubbard's interview found him "not available" or "out of town" over a two-week span.

"MAYOR HUBBARD is absolutely wrong as far as I know anything about the Americans of Polish descent in my area," declared Rep. Thaddeus M. Machrowicz (Dem., Mich.).

The congressman's district, embracing Hamtranck as well as part of Detroit, is racially mixed though predominantly Polish.

"That statement is certainly not a reflection of the attitudes of these people," the congressman said.

LOUIS MIRIANA president of the Detroit Common Council said:

"Most of the Americans of Italian extraction in the city today were born and raised or Detroit's lower Eastside and they count among their friends many of our fine colored citizens.

"After all," Miriana was quoted as saying, "They (colored and Italians) went to school together, played games together, went to the university together and today many of them are doctors and lawyers and engineers.

Citizen Movement Gets Results—$6,500 To $17,500

Advertiser P.4-A Wed. 6-13-56 Montgomery, Ala.

Some weeks ago The Christian Century, a journal of great influence, complimented The Advertiser for its coverage of the virgin story of race disharmony in the Northern provinces.

For this, we were grateful, but it was nevertheless necessary to chide The Century for its dreamy approach to the harsh realities of Northern race strife. The Century deplored the fact that Dearborn, Michigan's fourth largest city, permits no Negro to spend the night within city limits. The Century opined that there must be a Christian movement started instanter to get rid of Mayor Orville Hubbard.

The Advertiser tried to pierce the gentle doctrinaire mists enveloping The Century with the observation that Mayor Hubbard was not the reason for this total segregation—what it had to get rid of was the citizenry of Dearborn which agrees with him. Anyhow, The Century has its citizen movement in action in Dearborn and yesterday the result came on the AP wire—

DETROIT, June 12 (AP) — Mayor Orville Hubbard of suburban Dearborn, pro-segregationist who says he has kept Negroes from living in Dearborn, was voted a salary increase from $6,500 to $17,500 annually yesterday.

Voters turned down similar increase for other Dearborn officials.

The issue was the first at the polls since Hubbard had been quoted as saying [in an Advertiser interview]: "I am for segregation one million per cent, at all levels . . . The people of Dearborn are behind me."

Family Mistaken For Negroes To Move Out Of Rock Torn House

Detroit, Mich., July 23 — The family of a man who was mistaken for a Negro was waiting last week to move out of the house it sold after being the target of an April 6 rock-tossing demonstration by neighbors.

According to John W. Rouse, "everything's OK now and everything is quiet. We're just waiting for people to move out of the house we bought."

Rouse, 70, a retired plant guard, said he is of French Canadian and Cherokee Indian descent.

The Rouse family blamed "rumors by one man" for stirring up the disturbance.

Judge Ends Segregation In St. Louis

Call Fri. 1-6-56 P. 2

Housing Authority Cannot Continue Separate Projects

Kansas City, Mo.

ST. LOUIS. — (ANP) — United States District Judge George H. Moore last week ordered an end to segregation in low-rent public housing in St. Louis.

He forbade the St. Louis Housing authority to refuse to lease to qualified Negro applicants and also enjoined the agency from maintaining a policy of segregating tenants because of race.

The Housing authority will consider the ruling at its next meeting and decide whether to appeal it.

The original suit was filed by a group of Negroes who said they applied for admission to a project in 1952 but had not been accepted because of their race.

Judge Moore said that a policy of segregating tenants by race is a "violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States."

He said that both whites and Negroes formerly lived in the areas now occupied by the projects and that the money for the projects came from taxes collected from both races.

The decision, handed down on Dec. 27, is the fourth such victory in housing won this year by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the first in a southern community. Previous rulings against housing segregation during 1955 were secured in Detroit, Columbus, Ohio; and Camden, N. J.

Two women NAACP lawyers, Mrs. Constance Baker Motley of the national office in New York and Mrs. Frankie M. Freeman of St. Louis, aided by R. L. Witherson of St. Louis, handled the suit on behalf of 15 complainants who had been denied admission to a project set aside exclusively for white occupancy. The suit was filed on June 25, 1952.

The order issued by Judge Moore enjoins city and housing officials from refusing to lease to qualified Negro applicants any dwelling units because of race and from maintaining a policy or practice of segregating tenants in public housing projects on the basis of race.

The city had maintained two Negro and two white projects with the financial assistance of the United States Public Housing Administration. After the suit was filed and before this week's ruling, the St. Louis Housing Authority opened a fifth project on an integrated basis.

Commenting on Judge Moore's "ership" theme advised members to decision, Mrs. Motley said that it was "highly significant because integrated public housing in St. Louis will facilitate the efforts of the board of education to integrate public schools."

Judge Moore said his ruling applied to all four segregated projects in the city, and not solely to the John J. Cochran apartments, the only project involved in the suits in which the ruling was made.

The Cochran project, built in 1952, houses 704 families and is for whites only. The other three are Clinton-Peabody Terrace Apartments, 657 families, for whites only; Carr Square Village, 558 families, for colored only, and the Wendell Pruitt project, 1,736 families, for colored only.

A policy of nonsegregation already is being followed in the William L. Igoe Apartments, where about 300 units have been rented.

Judge Moore pointed out that the segregated projects were in neighborhoods where both colored and white families had lived.

He said the housing authority's practice of refusing to lease to eligible colored families certain units of public housing under its administration and in following a policy of racial segregation violated the Federal Constitution and laws.

His ruling was made in a suit in which several colored persons who claimed to be qualified applicants said they had been refused units in the Cochran project.

Judge Moore said he had investigated the cases of three of the applicants and had found each was qualified for occupancy of project units.

One case reviewed by Judge Moore in his findings was that of Charlie Miner, who now lives with his wife and seven children in a three-room apartment which has a toilet but no bath. Judge Moore said Miner was a World War II veteran who, in 1953, earned $2,719.

Missouri City Sues to Oust Negro Physician From Land

Oklahoma City, Okla.

ST. LOUIS.—(ANP)—The city of Creve Coeur decided it wanted a city park last week to be built on the property where a Negro physician is building a $55,000 residence and the dispute has led to a condemnation suit filed in St. Louis county circuit court. Fri. 11-9-56

The suit seeks to take over about eight acres of land for a baseball diamond and tennis courts. The petition affects Dr. Howard P. Venable, an eye surgeon who is building the house on the two-acre tract of land on Speede road north of Ladue road.

Dr. Venable said he bought the two one-acre tracts of land earlier this year from the Ashby Development Corp., and started building May 1. Dr. Venable was not named in the court action. The suit instead named Lawrence M. Michaelson, identified on tax records as owner of the property.

Dr. Venable said the suit was a "clear-cut case of racial discrimination." The doctor is opthalmologist-in-chief at Homer G. Phillips hospital and senior instructor in ophthalmology at St. Louis University School of Medicine.

City Attorney William H. Whne jr., of Creve Coeur, said the charge of racial discrimination was "ridiculous" and added that the persons named in the suit were listed as owners in tax records. He said the action would be amended to include Dr. Venable if a title search showed him to be an owner.

The doctor contended, however, that the city knew he owned the land. He said they issued him a building permit in April. He stated that since then he has been approached four times by an attorney representing a group seeking to buy his property.

He said amout 11 other Negroes, mostly professional men, had planned to move into the Speede Meadows area, but the others had withdrawn.

Construction on the doctor's three-bedroom ranch style house was halted in August.

Ending Bias In Private Housing Most Urgent

Word p. 4 Birmingham, Ala.

38c

NEW YORK — Ending racial restrictions in privately owned housing was called by the Urban League of Greater New York today "New York City's most urgent unwon battle for democracy." The statement was made in the League's 46th annual report, "Building Together," and covering the period from June 1955 to June 1956.

The Urban League is a 46-year old interracial agency working to achieve equality of opportunity in employment, housing, education health and welfare services for Negroes and other minorities.

The report found greatly improved job opportunities for Negroes in interstate buses where Negro drivers were hired for the first time; in bakeries, which have just begun to hire Negroes as driver-salesmen; in railroads, where an increasing number of Negro brakemen have been hired and are enjoying union membership, and in dario and television, where an "unprecedented" number of Negroes have been employed in managerial performing, technical and administrative capacities.

More limited gains were reported with the nation's commercial airlines, which, the League said, still exclude Negroes from flight employment. The Negro longshoreman "remained low man on the waterfront," according to the working conditions, as well as general recognition of his "short rations." The report pointed out that Negroes were still excluded by management and unions from firemen's and engineers' jobs on the railroads, and were not, by and large, hired as announcers, newsmen or producers for radio and television.

"Important stride" were reported in breaking down discriminatory practices in publicly assisted housing, including the passage of legislation barring discrimination in any housing which receives local, state of federal assistance or mortgage guarantee.

"However," the report stated, "most private landlord ... refuse to rent or sell to Negroes outside of accepted 'Negro areas' such as Harlem." Legislation prohibiting discrimination in privately owned apt. houses, similar to existing statutes covering public and publicly assisted housing, was considered by the League a necessary "first step in breaking down discrimination" in such housing.

The report criticised "continued emphasis on building public housing in crowded all-Negro communities." It advocated the construction of public housing on vacant land sites "where there is opportunity both to build racially integrated communities and to effect a real increase in available housing."

It also criticised in available housing."

It also criticised relocation practices of Title I slum clearance developers and their failure especially in the Godfrey Nurse development in Harlem to actually build new housing.

The League reported progress in its effect to achieve racial integration in New York City's public schools and to improve the quality of education offered to minority children.

It described the formation by the League and the Council of Spanish-American Organizations of a joint Planning committee to "work cooperatively on mutual problems in housing, employment, education, civil rights, political representation as well as problems in intra-group understanding"

The report described the formation of a new membership department, the first in the National Urban League Movement

The League reported that nearly 400 families who wished to adopt Negro and Puerto Rican children were referred to adoption agencies by Adopt-A-Child, a partnership effort organized by the League and the public and private adoption agencies of New York City to increase adoption of minority children.

The League set as its goals for the next year:

"Negroes flying planes with every major airlines; Negroes and Puerto Ricans working on an equal basis with whites on New York's waterfront; an end to discrimination by employers and unions in firemen's and engineers' job on the railroads; complete integration in the radio and TV industries; establishment of the legal rights of minorities to housing without discrimination because of race; an end to all vestiges of discrimination in publicly assisted housing, where the legal right has been established; an effective city planning policy to build public housing on vacant land, rather than on overcrowded, segregated sites; a working policy of public school zoning for integration, and the establishment of a central school zoning department; an end to the inferior standard of education offered to minority children in our public schools; an end to the bottleneck in adoption of Negro and Puerto Rican children"

In its financial report, covering the year 1955, the League reported a total expenditure of $150,334.3[illegible] for its program in employment and career guidance, personal service housing, public education and research, fund raising and membership activities.

Man Convicted In Urging Boys To Stone Home

Advertiser P. 8-a Sat. Sept. 22-56

Montgomery, Ala.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21 (AP)—A 25-year-old plasterer's helper was convicted today of inducing three boys to break windows in the home of a Negro family which had moved into a white neighborhood in the Bronx.

William Pizzolongo was found guilty in Bronx Special Sessions Court. He is to be sentenced Oct. 15.

The three boys threw stones and broke windows last May at the home of Percy Hill, a Negro.

Richard Ferri, 16, testified that Pizzolongo urged him and two younger boys to throw the stones. Ferri is to go on trial Oct. 4. The cases of the younger boys were handled by the Bronx Children's Court.

Abrams Says State Laws Against Discrimination Are Workable and Effective

Times Sat. 9-22-56

New York

New York State laws barring racial discrimination in Government-aided housing have proved "workable, effective instruments" in helping minorities obtain decent housing, it was reported yesterday by Charles Abrams, chairman of the State Commission Against Discrimination.

He pointed out that nearly 300 Negro families in this city had recently acquired residence in Title I developments where the tenants were predominantly white. He said this integration had been accomplished with no friction. Title I projects are built by private developers with the aid of the city and the Federal Government.

Mr. Abrams also noted that there had been no reduction in construction because of state laws barring racial discrimination in housing insured by the Federal Housing Administration or the Veterans Administration.

The state law prohibiting discrimination in housing insured by the F. H. A. or the V. A. became effective in July of last year. The commission got jurisdiction over the law in July of this year. It has had jurisdiction over housing aided by the city and state for several years.

"Experience in the past," Mr. Abrams said, "has shown that if compliance with the law begins with the initial renting of the developments, few difficulties are experienced thereafter."

He said the fear of builders that first renting to minority families would discourage other families from living in the building had not been borne out in this state.

Moreover, he said, recent studies showed that the demand by Negroes for privately built projects was small and that the fear of whites that they would be "inundated" by Negroes was not justified by the facts.

He said the commission had received "widespread pledges of cooperation" from real estate men and builders that they would see to it that minority applicants were considered on the same basis as others. He said it was the commission's hope to obtain compliance with the law through voluntary cooperation.

Wagner Asks End Of Housing Bias

World-Telegram Sun P. 3

Sat. 10-13-56

New York

The complete elimination of all restrictions based on race, religion or national origin in private as well as public housing is the aim of his administration, Mayor Robert F. Wagner declared last night.

The Mayor, who is running for the Senate on the Democrtic ticket, spoke at a dinner of the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, attended by more than 300 persons at the Park Lane.

38c

"As a matter of morality, as well as law, all New Yorkers must have the right to bargain for their shelter in a freely open, competitive housing market," Mayor Wagner said.

Earlier in the evening, the Mayor made a 15-minute television address over a CBS statewide hookup. He said the Republican administration had failed to liberalize the immigration laws and had "sabotaged" the Refugee Relief Act.

When the act expires Dec. 31, he declared, there will be 45,000 unused visas because of the Eisenhower's administration's "tragic" handling of the program. He charged that Edward J. Corsi was fired as expediter because he "took his job seriously."

From the Park Lane dinner the Mayor went to a reception at the St. George Hotel, Brooklyn, given by the Italian-

American Professional and Business Men's Assn.

Today he was to go upstate for a speaking tour in the Albany area, returning to the city tomorrow morning.

His Republican opponent, Attorney General Jacob K. Javits, was also to go upstate today, but he, too, will be back in town tomorrow and very busy. Among other things he will watch the start of a football game between Iceland and Israel.

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. p. 3

Sat. 10-27-56

NEW YORK — "The thing that is happening to me is exactly what I have been telling audiences in Turkey, Yugoslavia, Italy and France couldn't happen to a colored person in the North.

"In the South, yes, but not up here."

That is what Robert Pritchard, young concert pianist just returned from a six-month tour of the Middle East and Europe, playing and lecturing on American democracy at the request of the U.S. State Department, told the press last week.

Last week Mr. Pritchard was battling in the courts and before the State Commission Against Discrimination for the right to live in an apartment at 926 Park Ave. here. He accused the owners of changing the lock on the door.

* * *

IN HIS FORMAL complaint to SCAD, he said he had paid a deposit, signed a lease, accepted the keys to the apartment, moved in his furniture and obtained telephone and utility services.

Learning of the vacancy last summer, he added, he and a friend, Regis Benoit, white, decided to rent the $165 a month apartment as co-tenants, so Mr. Benoit negotiated with the Pat Palmer rental agency while he went on his tour.

A $60 deposit was made on the three-room apartment in the names of both men and references were filed for both. In Pritchard's absence Benoit signed a lease naming both men as co-tenants and made arrangements for utilities.

* * *

WHEN THE QUARTERS were not ready for occupancy on Oct. 1 as scheduled, Mrs. Harold Gelfand who, with her physician-husband, is listed as owner of the building, suggested that the furniture be moved in nevertheless.

Mr. Pritchard quoted the superintendent as telling him:

"No N--o is going to move into this building, son. You're going to get in a lot of trouble," but he turned over the keys and Mr. Pritchard moved his furniture in anyway.

When he went to the Pat Palmer real estate offices on Oct. 2 to sign his part of the lease, Pritchard said, "Miss Palmer turned pale."

* * *

SHE ASKED HIM to give references again, told him he could not play his piano in the apartment (to which he said he agreed) and that he needed a regular checking account instead of a special one.

Finally she permitted him to sign the lease, he said, but he found afterwards that the lock on the apartment door had been changed when he sought to send other furniture there.

Miss Palmer vigorously denied that "race, creed or color" had anything to do with her actions or that the lock on the door to the apartment had been changed.

One of the owners of the apartment was summoned to magistrates' court.

Segregation In Suburbs On Increase

Post-Herald Tues. 11-27-56 B'ham, Ala.

Shift Of Families From City Seen Boosting Barriers

p. 20

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 26 (AP)—The movement of white families to the suburbs "is tending to create increasingly rigid patterns of residential segregation" in New York State, a housing study group reports.

Private enterprise has failed, the report said, to provide housing to meet the needs of Negroes and Puerto Ricans in the middle-income bracket.

The 41-member Housing Advisory Council to the State Commission Against Discrimination submitted the report, its first, to Gov. Harriman and the commission. The report was made public by the governor.

"It has become abundantly clear," the council said, "that better economic conditions alone cannot be relied upon to provide minority citizens with equal opportunity to meet their housing needs."

The council called the minority demand for middle-income housing "comparatively modest" and said an economic survey showed that integration "can be handled smoothly and without appreciable complications or difficulties to any individual developer" if the minority demand is well distributed over projects covered by anti-discrimination laws.

The report recommended a long-range educational program aimed at builders, managers, brokers and lenders involved in construction of housing covered by the laws, and at the "multitude of citizens who comprise the market for these units."

It urged, too, that the 1957 legislature provide the "minimun funds necessary" to make the state commission's "machinery for mobilizing citizen leadership effective in fact as well as in theory."

State law prohibits discrimination in multifamily housing or in sale of homes built in groups of 10 or more with the aid of FHA or VA mortgages if they were financed after July 1, 1955. The legislature assigned to the commission against discrimination the job of enforcing this law and a companion measure banning discrimination in public or publicly aided housing.

PREJUDICE VICTIMS — Mr. and Mrs. Percy Hill, who moved into a $12,000 home in a predominately white neighborhood in the Bronx, stand outside Magistrate's Court, Thursday, after testifying in the case of four youths who allegedly threw rocks, covered with threatening notes, into their home the previous weekend. Two of the suspects have been held in $1,500 bail for a hearing later this week.

Stoning of Bronx home deplored

Afro-American Sat. 5-19-56

Baltimore, Md.

NEW YORK—Spurred by Mayor Wagner and Police Commissioner Kennedy, police are pressing their investigation to find the real reason for the stoning of a house purchased by a colored couple in the Bronx.

A stone was thrown through the window of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Percy Hill, 747 E. 183rd St., Sunday. Another smashed a window in the house the following night. The neighborhood is predominantly white.

POLICE SAID a 16-year-old youth threw the stones. Three other suspects have been arrested—William Pizzolongo, 20, unemployed chauffeur of 2309 Crotona Ave., and two 14-year-olds.

Two of the suspects were held in $1,500 bail for a hearing later this week.

New York's mayor commented acidly on the rock throwing incident. He called it "an affront to our great city and all its citizens."

THE HILLS, employed at the Hotel Shelton, moved into the $12,500 house in February. They say they encountered no trouble previous to the weekend attacks.

* * *

AN INVESTIGATING patrolman found a note wrapped around the stone which crashed the window. It threatened that the house would be burned if the Hills didn't move.

The NAACP and the New York Trades Council each sent telegrams to Mayor Wagner and Commissioner Kennedy demanding protection for the Hills. A 24-hour guard has been stationed at the house.

The note made it clear the thrower was motivated by hatred of colored people.

Mrs. Rose Desiro, 79, who has lived in the house next to that bought by the Hills for 35 years, said that Mr. and Mrs. Hill were "nice people."

"They do not bother anybody," she went on, adding, "I don't understand how people can treat other people in this manner. They are decent people. They have the right to live where they choose."

Threats Follow Negroes Into Homes In New York

Fri. 5-18-56

Montgomery, Ala.

NEW YORK, May 17 (AP)—Police today kept a watchful eye over the homes of a Negro couple in the Bronx and a Negro widow on Long Island, where threats have been reported because they moved into predominantly white neighborhoods.

Bronx Asst. Dist. Atty. Mortimer Todal said a threatening letter and post card have been sent through the mail to Percy Hill, a Negro hotel elevator operator. Rocks were tossed through the windows of his new home in the Bronx last week.

A patrolman on the neighborhood beat was told to watch the house but no guards were placed on the home.

"When there's any kind of trouble in the neighborhood, we always have the beat man keep his eye on the reported area," said a desk sergeant at the Ryer Ave. station.

In a similar move, the state police radio patrol was told to keep tabs on the home of Gloria Fuller. She and her two daughters moved into a two-story frame house in North Bay Shore May 9 and set off a protest meeting of some 150 white neighbors.

The day before she moved in, police said, they had reports of threats to burn down her house and that of a white neighbor who paid the Negro widow a welcoming visit.

The protest meeting discussed possibilities of a petition to take legal action to oust the Negro family, but so far none has appeared in the neighborhood.

Todal told of the new threats against the Hill family in Bronx Adolescent Court at a hearing for Richard Farri, 16, who alledgedly tossed the rocks "for laughs and kicks," and William Pizzolongo, 25, who is charged with malicious mischief in the incident.

Ferri also is accused of penning the obscene note wrapped around one of the rocks. Police said the note was written in red ink and contained racial inferences and a threat to burn down the house.

Todal declined to discuss the contents of the threatening letter and postcard, but said they arrived at the Hill home since stones were hurled through the windows May 5 and 7.

Hearings for Ferri and Pizzolongo were postponed until May 28 at the request of defense attorneys. Two 14-year-old boys also are accused in the rock tossing and will be tried in children's court.

Hill and his wife, Cora, a domestic servant, bought the Bronx home for $12,450 after being evicted from a Harlem tenement that was condemned to make way for a public housing project.

At the time the first threats were received, he refused to move out of the neighborhood, saying "Where can we go? Our life savings are invested in the house."

The Fuller woman, an attendant at Pilgrim State Hospital in Brentwood, bought the Long Island home for $9,450 and moved there from Brooklyn with her eight and nine year-old daughters.

Mrs. William Dehner, the white neighbor who befriended her, said she has received more than 100 letters supporting her stand.

Stork Club Bars Negro Designers!

Courier 6-22

NEW YORK—The hallowed Stork Club—last of the Northern plantations where you are supposed to stay in your place—did it up good this time. Saturday morning, just hours before the scheduled fashion show and cocktail party of the National Association of Fashion and Accessories Designers, owner Sherman Billingsley cancelled the affair because he didn't like the newspapers bothering him nor did he care for the publicity attending the affair. He termed the show "a publicity stunt."

Telephone conversations between Billingsley and officials of NAFAD brought no other specific reason for the cancellation. To one member he reportedly stated: "I'm going to break you just like I broke Josephine Baker."

To another member who also sought an explanation, she stated he said: "You can't cross-examine me." Billingsley is also reported to have charged that "someone put you (NAFAD) up to this."

By 4 o'clock, guests holding $25 tickets to the affair were beginning to arrive at the Stork. They were told by the doorman that the party had been cancelled. Meanwhile NAFAD had made hurried arrangements to present their show at the Statler Hotel. They attempted to contact as many guests as possible about the change of plans. The show, presenting the work of the nation's most outstanding Negro designers, was given before a small audience in the Hartford Room of the Statler.

By 5 o'clock reporters and photographers had gathered in front of the Stork. A small detail of police was called.

One Negro reporter entered the club and sat at the bar. A male guest that she knew told her that it was rumored among the employes at the club that a $700 check from NAFAD had bounced. Mrs. Jeanetta Welsh Brown, general chairman and founder of NAFAD, immediately denied this, stating that Billingsley apparently had not yet deposited the two NAFAD checks since he had already offered to return them to her.

Negro Fashion Group 'Miffed' As Stork Club Cancels Show

Courier-Journal 6-19-56

New York, June 18 (AP) — A fashion organization composed mostly of Negro designers and teachers today was reported miffed at the Stork Club, claiming the swank night spot abruptly canceled a reservation for a fashion show.

The New York Post said the National Association of Fashion and Accessories Design charged it was canceled out of the club's banquet room by owner Sherman Billingsley last Thursday less than 48 hours before the show was to take place.

Billingsley had no comment.

The Post quoted Mrs. Jeanette Brown, founder of the organization, as saying:

"We arranged to rent the banquet room last March because it suited our needs for a fashion show. I talked to the banquet manager several times, and, as the time for the show drew near, everything was arranged, including the menu, the stage, and the lights.

Billingsley "Very Angry"

"Then last Tuesday, Mr. Billingsley called, very angry. We had sent our press releases announcing the show, as we have always done and as any organization naturally would do. He was getting calls from the press.

"What were we trying to do to him? he wanted to know . . . Late Thursday, less than 48 hours before our show, he called me and said he was canceling the affair."

The organization shifted the show to a hotel.

N.Y. Segregated Too, Hal Dumas Tells Rotary Here

Constitution Wed. 6-13-56 Atlanta, Ga.

Segregation in New York City is quite as real as it is in Atlanta, a former New Yorker, who is returning to Atlanta, said here Tuesday.

Hal Dumas, former president of Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co., told the Atlanta Rotary Club that this city is the "finest, freest city I know anything about."

He called New York "the most painfully racial and religious clique-minded town in existence."

"I have never seen Negroes in many of the churches that talk down segregation; nor Negro society pictures in papers that support integration," he declared. He said transportation is an exception.

Dumas praised New York Mayor Robert Wagner, but he said the city needs to develop civic support from the businessmen of the city.

He left Atlanta in 1951 to become executive vice president of American Telephone and Telegraph Co.

After his retirement in a few weeks, Dumas will travel in Europe. He plans to make Atlanta his permanent home.

Racial clause in NEA tour application hit

Afro-American Sat. 6-23-56

NEW YORK — Roy Wilkins, NAACP Executive secretary this week expressed "distress" over reported exclusion of some members of the National Education Association from a tour sponsored by that organization "solely on the basis of their religion."

The NEA purportedly has informed applicants for a round-the-world tour to submit affidavits stating they are not Jewish because of religious discrimination in certain countries on the itinerary.

3 NAMED TO FIGHT CITY HOUSING BIAS

Times Thurs. 8-2-56

Mayor Appoints Advisory Group—2-Year Delay in Certain Areas Asked

New York

Mayor Wagner named a three-man committee yesterday to help the city formulate a public housing policy that will advance racial integration.

The committee is headed by James Felt, chairman of the City Planning Commission. The other members are Frank Horn, executive director of the city's Intergroup Relations Commission, and Stanley Lowell, assistant to the Mayor.

The appointments were announced after a conference between the Mayor and representatives of eighteen of the civic organizations belonging to the New York State Committee on Discrimination in Housing. The committee is not to be confused with the State Commission Against Discrimination, an official state agency.

In a statement presented to the Mayor, the committee asked for a two-year halt of new public and publicly assisted housing projects in areas of minority racial concentration. It suggested that projects be located on vacant land, preferably in areas such as Queens.

"Selection of the site," the committee contended, "will either promote or prevent the realization of non-segregated housing." Spokesmen for the committee told the Mayor that locating new projects in such areas as Harlem would merely extend existing housing segregation.

Racial Quotas Opposed

The committee suggested also that the city adopt a policy of public housing management techniques designed to develop racial integration without recourse to racial quotas.

Later in the day the Mayor held a long conference with representatives of business and community groups interested in slum clearance housing in Harlem. Assisting the Mayor in his discussion with these groups was Manhattan Borough President Hulan E. Jack.

Most of those at the meeting reiterated viewpoints expressed before the Board of Estimate on Thursday when the city's slum clearance housing program was under discussion.

The groups, said by Mr. Jack to represent responsible business civic and social sentiment in Harlem, asked that the city do more to alleviate the hardships caused by displacement and relocation of residential and business tenants on sites picked for housing projects.

The Mayor was told that the city and Housing Authority should step up their educational and public relations activities in connection with new housing projects in order to ease the fears and worries of residential and business tenants.

Harriman urges legislature to give SCAD power to ban JC in U.S. housing

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Jan. 1-14-56

ALBANY, N.Y. (NNPA)—Gov. Averell Harriman called upon the New York Legislature Wednesday, to enact legislation to give the State Commission Against Discrimination power to enforce the law against discimination in Federally aided housing.

In his annual message at the opening session of the 1956 legislature, he said:

"In our ever-present struggle to wipe out racial and religious discrimination in all its forms, some notable steps forward were taken this past year.

"THE OFFENSIVE reference to color has been eliminated from motor vehicle operators' licenses and applications.

"Pursuant to my recommendations two laws were enacted at the last session affecting discrimination in housing.

"The first gave to the SCAD authority to enforce the existing private housing.

"The second law prohibited for the first time discrimination in the sale or rental of new housing built with FHA or VA mortgage guaranties.

"UNFORTUNATELY THE jurisdiction of SCAD was not extended to the FHA or VA housing.

"A committee which I appointed has been at work to promote compliance with this new law, both by disseminating information, and by attempting to secure the co-operation of the Federal authorities in encouraging compliance.

"But an informal committee is no substitute for effective enforcement machinery. I, therefore recommend the enactment of legislation which would give the SCAD authority to enforce the law prohibiting discriminaton in housing built with the asstance of Federally insured mortgages.

"IT IS MY hope that under the new chairman (Charles Abrams), one of the ablest men of my administration, the work of the commission in all fields will be carried on with increased vigor and determination.

"In spite of the progress that has been made there are still many areas in which equal treatment for persons of all religions is far from a reality.

"In order to assure that the commission can function effectively, I renew my recommendation of last year that it be given specific power to initiate investigations and regulatory action on its own motive in all fields under its jurisdiction."

ALBANY BILL ASKS HOUSING BIAS BAN

Times Fri. 1-20-56

Harriman Measure Would Apply to Projects That Involve Federal Funds

By RICHARD P. HUNT

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 19—The Harriman Administration introduced a bill today to apply the state's anti-discrimination laws to housing built with Federal loans or mortgage guarantees. P. 42-C

The measure would empower the State Commission Against Discrimination to prevent discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin in projects financed with Federal Housing Administration or Veterans Administration funds.

Although it would not authorize the commission to act on its own initiative, without waiting for a complaint, a separate bill to that end is being prepared at the request of Charles Abrams, chairman of the commission.

The measure introduced today would apply to any unit for three or more families constructed after July 1, 1956, with funds advanced by a Federal agency. The commission would have jurisdiction during the life of the loan.

New York

Democrats Want Credit

Contrary to Mr. Abrams wishes, the bill was sponsored by two Democrats, Senator Joseph A. Zaretzki of Manhattan and Assemblyman Bertram L. Baker of Brooklyn. N. Y.

He had sought bipartisan sponsorship, but was overruled by Democratic legislative leaders on the ground that the party had developed the program and should put its own label on it.

Under a law enacted last year, the commission has jurisdiction in housing projects built until financial aid from the state and local governments.

Among the other bills introduced were two that would carry out Attorney General Jacob K. Javits' request for mandatory clinical treatment of parolees convicted of narcotics charges.

The first measure, offered by Senator George T. Manning of Rochester and Assemblyman Ernest Curto of Niagara Falls, both Republicans, would authorize the State Parole Board to make the taking of treatments a condition of parole.

The second, introduced by Senator Fred J. Rath of Utica and Assemblyman Lucio F. Russo of Staten Island, both Republicans, would empower the State Health Department to set up experimental clinics with an appropriation of $100,000.

Two Other Bills Planned

Mr. Javits said that measures were being prepared to increase the penalties for narcotics violations and to establish a state "watchdog" agency on narcotics.

Two Queens Republicans, Senator Walter G. McGahan and Assemblyman Fred U. Preller, proposed a measure that would prohibit discrimination because of age in hiring practices.

Another bill, introduced by Senator Earl W. Brydges, Republican of Niagara Falls, and Assemblyman Stanley Steingut, Democrat of Brooklyn, called for permanently increasing state assistance to classes for retarded, handicapped and delinquent children from $800 to $1,600 a year.

Last year, the amount was increased from $800 to $1,528 for each class by a special appropriation. However, there was no provision to continue the higher payments.

P. 3

It said that New York is developing into a "two class" city, while the suburbs are suffering "tremendous problems" as a result of the exodus from the metropolis.

The state committee recommended the following:

1. Bar the use of any federal housing aids to support or extend segregation.

2. Reappriaisal of site selection policies so as to insure adequate use of open and predominantly open sites for both public and private housing and to avoid use of densely populated areas of minority concentration.

3. Require the City of New York itself to assure responsibility to relocate families from whites which will be sold to private sponsors of projects. Okla. City

4. Provide trained personnel on the staff of local urban renewal proposals.

The housing group warned that the policy of clearing crowded slum areas instead of building on open sites and the relocation of slum dwellers into equally crowded areas "has resulted in the creation of new slums at a faster pace than the old ones are being eliminated."

At the same time, the statement pointed out, minority groups have found difficulty in obtaining suitable living quarters either in suburban areas or in desirable sections of the city because of discrimination.

Award $750 to mixed couple, right to flat

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 2-4-56

NEW YORK — The state Supreme Court's award of $750 in compensatory damages to an interracial couple along with a permanent injunction against a realty firm that had sought to lock them out of an apartment they had rented was hailed by the local NAACP branch last week. P. 13

The award was made to Mr. and Mrs. Thurman Faulk of 18 Perry St. who had rented an apartment in a building at 588 West End Ave. from the Syltol Realty Corporation.

* * *

THE STATE Temporary Housing Rent Commission joined forces with the NAACP in bringing the case before the court.

Commenting on the action, Jawn A. Sandifer, NAACP attorney, declared:

"This is the first instance to our knowledge where the courts and the rent commission have indicated such a positive and direct position against this form of discrimination.

Negroes Here Barred From Best Houses, Pastor Says

The Rev. James H. Robinson of the Presbyterian Church of the Master, 360 West 122d Street, charged yesterday that "there is no such thing as open occupancy" in the city's "higher-bracket housing."

Fewer than 100 Negro families of the "increasing number" who can afford it, he said, "have been permitted to live in first-class apartment houses."

Speaking at the Stephen Wise Free Synagogue, 30 West Sixty-eighth Street, Mr. Robinson paid tribute to the air transportation industry for its advances in the treatment of Negro passengers. But he added:

"Negroes are still limited to service personnel and red caps. There are no Negro pilots or stewardesses on any of the scheduled air lines of this country. Negro physicians are still barred from many of the voluntary hospitals of New York, some of which are affiliated with and influenced by the great religious bodies of our city."

Caught in Urban Squeeze

Negroes Are Victims in N. Y. Housing Changes

Dispatch Thurs. 1-12-56

NEW YORK—(ANP)—Negroes here have been caught in a squeeze brought on by the fact that New York is becoming a city "composed of the very rich and the very poor" as middle class white families flee to the suburbs for lack of middle income housing.

This is the gist of a report issued by the N.Y. State Committee on Distrimination in Housing, signed by 15 civic, educational, religious, social welfare and veterans groups.

The statement was presented to a House subcommittee investigating public housing.

Mixed Couple Wins Fight For Apartment In White Neighborhood

Yesterday P. 1

New York — (CNS) — Interracial couple Diana and Thurman Faulk won not only $750 in compensatory damages but a permanent injunction against a realty firm which had sought to lock them out of an apartment they had rented in a white fashionable neighborhood.

The award was won in a State Supreme Court decision and is believed to be the first one where the courts and the Rent Commission have indicated such positive action against this form of discrimination.

Mayor Wagner made his statement in a ground-breaking ceremony at 10:30 A. M. for St. Mary's Park Houses, a middle income project of the City Housing Authority.

3 Boys, A Man Held In Stoning Of Negro's Home

Courier-Journal Fri. 3-11-56 Louisville, Ky.

New York, May 10 (AP) — Three teen-agers and a 25-year-old man were arrested today in connection with rock and brick throwing into the house windows of a Negro couple living in a predominantly white neighborhood.

The incidents occurred last Sunday and Monday. Attached to one missile, police said, was a note containing obscenities,

Hurled Brick Warns Negro To Get Out

Herald Wed. 5-9-56 Miami, Fla.

NEW YORK —(AP)— A Brick with a threatening note wrapped around it was hurled through a window of a Negro home in a predominantly white neighborhood in the Bronx Monday night.

Police said the note warned Percy Hill, 44, and his wife, Cora, 52, to leave the neighborhood.

A stone was flung through a window of the Hill home Sunday night.

The Hills moved into the two-story, nine-room frame house last Feb. 27. Hill said the house cost $12,450.

Asked if he intends to stay, he replied: "What else can we do? I think we'll stay."

Hill is an elevator operator and his wife a hotel maid.

A policeman has been ordered to keep the house under surveillance.

4 Boys Seized, 3 Others Sought In Stoning of Negro's Bronx Home

From New York P. 33-C Thurs. 5-10-56

Four boys were taken into custody last night and three others were being sought by East Bronx detectives for the stoning on Sunday and Monday nights of a Negro couple's home in a predominantly white neighborhood.

No formal charges were made, pending questioning of the group by the Bronx District Attorney. Nor had the police yet determined the motive for the attacks, which broke the front porch windows of the home at 747 East 183d Street, between Crotona and Prospect Avenues. The boys in custody ranged in age from 13 to 20.

Mayor Wagner described the stonings yesterday as "an affront to our great city and all its citizens." He ordered Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy to "pursue the matter vigorously as a crime against the city."

Mr. and Mrs. Percy Hill moved into the $12,450 home on Feb. 27 and lived there without incident until Sunday, when a stone was tossed through the window. Two more missiles were hurled Monday night. One of them was wrapped in a note containing obscenities, racial references and a warning to the couple to leave the neighborhood.

Mr. Hill, 44 years old, is an elevator operator at the Shelton Hotel. His wife, Cora, 42, is a chambermaid there.

Both the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the New York Hotel Trades Council, in telegrams to Commissioner Kennedy, urged immediate action on the matter.

Deputy Commissioner Walter Arm noted that the Commissioner had taken action before the receipt of the telegrams.

racial references, and a threat to burn down the house.

Percy Hill, 44, and his wife, Cora, 52, moved into their $12,450, two-story frame home in the Bronx February 27.

Police said 16-year-old Richard Ferri admitted throwing a brick at the Hill residence Monday night "for laughs and kicks."

Also seized were William Pizzolongo, 25, an unemployed chauffeur, and two 14-year-old boys.

Bricks Thrown At New York Couple's Apt.

Police have arrested all four persons involved.

The incident is reported to have occurred Sunday and Monday. Attached to one of the bricks was a note containing obscentities and racial references, police said. There was also a threat to burn the house down. The couple lived in a predominantly white neighborhood.

BOMBING OF HOUSE FOLLOWS RUMOR OF NEGRO PURCHASER

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. P. 5-A Wed. 6-20-56

UNIONDALE, N.Y., June 19 (AP)—A home-made kerosene bomb was tossed through the window of a house here today in an apparent protest against a rumored sale of the house to Negroes.

The bomb started a small fire in the dinette of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kurt Masuck. They and their son and daughter, Alfred, 17, and Lillian, 11, extinguished the fire.

Mrs. Masuck said she probably was responsible for the rumor. The family had sold the house to a realty firm preparatory to moving. She said she observed to neighbors "when a realty firm can't unload a house, they usually sell to Negroes."

Negro Settles Housing Row Out Of Court

Advertiser P. 5-A Mon. 11-19-56 Montgomery, Ala.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (AP)—A 27 year-old Negro pianist has decided to drop his charges of discrimination against the owner of a Park Ave. Apartment house, it was reported here.

Commissioner Nicholas Pinto of the state commission against discrimination said Robert Pritchard the pianist, and Mrs. Harold Gelfand, co-owner of the house, had settled the dispute after discussing the issue in his office.

Pritchard had charged that Mrs. Gelfand would not let him and his 21-year-old white friend, Regis Benoit, move into the apartment because he was a Negro.

Mrs. Gelfand had told Pinto color was never an issue in the matter According to the commissioner, the landlord questioned whether the pianist and his student-friend could meet the rental of $165 a month.

Pinto said Benoit's father, a New Britian, Conn., doctor, guranteed that the rent would be met. The offer, the commissioner said, helped settle the issue.

Pinto said it was his understanding that Pritchard had withdrawn the charges he lodged against Mrs. Gelfand in Magistrates court. The commissioner said he also was expecting a letter from Pritchard dropping the charges he had lodged with the commission.

Neither Pritchard nor Mrs. Gelfand was available for comment

Negroes Told to Move or Be Burned

Wed. 5-9-56

By Robert A. Poteete

Three stones, one wrapped in a threatening note, crashed out of the darkness on Monday night through the front windows of an East Bronx house recently bought and occupied by a Negro couple.

New York, N.Y.

It was the second successive night of stone-throwing at the two-story frame house, at 747 E. 183d St., a predominantly white neighborhood, into which Mr. and Mrs. Percy A. Hill moved on Feb. 27 after purchasing it for $12,450.

Burning Threat

The author of the note threatened to burn down the house unless the Hills moved out. It made clear the thrower was motivated by a hatred of Negroes.

On Sunday night, a single stone broke a small hole in one of the two living-room windows, but the Hills shrugged off the incident, assuming it had been a prank by youngsters.

Then, Monday night, just before 9 p. m., Mr. Hill was sitting in the living room with a caller—who had come to talk about renting one of the four rooms that the Hills intended to let in the nine-room house—when the three stones hurtled through the windows simultaneously, Mr. Hill said. Mrs. Hill was in another part of the house.

Calls Police

Mr. Hill ran outside, but saw no one on the street, he said. He then called police. It was a policeman who found the note—the Hills and the caller having overlooked it. Mr. Hill said the policeman had not permitted him to see the note, and that he did not know yesterday afternoon what was in it. Police, however, did paraphrase the note for reporters in a press conference.

A neighbor leaning out a window hanging her wash in an alley across the street when the stones were thrown told reporters she had heard the crash and the sound of two or more persons running eastward, but had seen no one. Police said another woman had reported seeing a youth of about fifteen running on the block—which is between Prospect and Crotona Aves.—at about the time of the attack.

The Bronx Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People started its own investigation of the incident yesterday, and sent telegrams to city officials urging protection for the Hills and an intense investigation by police and the Bronx District Attorney's office.

The New York Hotel Trades Council, in behalf of the unions in which Mr. and Mrs. Hill are enrolled, also sent telegrams to Mayor Wagner and to Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy expressing "shock" at the incident, and demanding "complete protection" for the couple and their home.

Most of the neighbors and storekeepers on and near the 183d St. block said that they knew the Hills only by sight and that they seldom saw the couple. Mr. Hill, who is forty-four, is an elevator operator at the Hotel Shelton, 49th St. and Lexington Ave. His wife, Mrs. Cora Thompson Hill, fifty-two, is a chambermaid at the hotel.

All residents interviewed described the Hills as quiet and pleasant, and none could recall a similar incident. Without knowing the contents of the note, the neighbors were inclined to believe it had been the work of a crank or a prankster. They said they had heard no complaints about the couple. Police said there had been no such incident in the area in their memory.

Mrs. Rose Diserio, seventy-nine, who has lived for thirty-five years in the house next door to the Hill house, said the Hills were "nice people—they do not bother anybody. It's pathetic that a thing like this should happen in this country. I don't understand how people can treat other people in this manner. They are decent people. They have the right to live where they choose."

Lehman Blames North For Housing Segregation

Evening Star Washington, D.C.

Mon. 6-4-56 A13-A

NEW YORK, June 4 (AP).—Senator Lehman, Democrat of New York, says the civil rights problem has "sharpened into a national crisis."

He said New York City's Harlem, a predominantly Negro and Puerto Rican area, is "illustration and proof" that the civil rights problem "is a Northern as well as a Southern one."

The Senator spoke in a Harlem church yesterday at the annual meeting of the Urban League of Greater New York. The league, whose members are both Negro and white, is dedicated to improving the lot of American Negroes.

The league cited Senator Lehman as "the conscience of the Senate and the Nation in the fight for full equality of opportunity for all Americans."

Harlem "a Ghetto"

"Harlem," said Senator Lehman, "is a community rich in tradition and culture . . . but Harlem is also a rebuke to us of the North, and a challenge to clean up our own backyard, even as we press forward with our efforts to bring justice and equality to the Negroes and other oppressed minorities in the South.

"Harlem is a ghetto. Harlem is an area of poverty, congestion, sub-standard housing, and substandard schooling. These conditions, rather than the race or national origin of the people who reside in Harlem, are primarily responsible for the high incidence of crime and juvenile delinquency in the area."

"We need residential integration in New York City. Housing segregation is responsible for the high incidence of school segregation in our metropolis."

Senator Lehman said prospects for passage of civil rights legislation at this session of Congress "are not bright."

Planners Are Criticized

"And if we are frustrated in Congress," he said, "I am prepared to carry the fight to the Democratic Convention in Chicago in August, and to the people, in the elections in the fall, regardless of whether I am a candidate for re-election or not."

Senator Lehman was critical of the "policies of our New York City planners" in public housing.

"We have built too many housing projects . . . on congested land," he said. "We have cleared some slums only to create new and worse ones. We have constructed housing projects which were, by their location, forced into a pattern of segregation."

He praised the Urban League and Charles Abrams, chairman of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination, for working toward a solution of the problem.

Police said Pizzolongo threw the rock and Ferri tossed the brick Monday night. Ferri was quoted as saying he did it "for laughs and kicks." They denied the Sunday stoning. One of the younger boys admitted being near the Hill house Sunday night, police reported.

Pizzolongo and Ferri were charged with malicious mischief. The 14-year-olds were held as juvenile delinquents.

The Hill home was under police guard since the Monday night terrorism. The Hills work at the Hotel Shelton, Lexington Ave. and 49th St. Mr. Hill is an elevator operator and his wife is a chambermaid.

Malicious Mischief Charged

Man, Boy Held in Stoning Of Negroes' Bronx Home

Fri. 5-11-56 P. 1

New York, N.Y.

A sixteen-year-old office boy and a twenty-five-year-old unemployed chauffeur were charged with malicious mischief in Bronx Magistrates' Court yesterday in the throwing of stones through windows of a Negro couple's home.

The youth, Richard Ferri, of 2422 Prospect Ave., the Bronx, who reportedly had said he threw a rock "for laughs and kicks," was also accused of sending a threatening and obscene note to another person. A note, using foul language and threatening to burn down the house if the tenants did not leave, was wrapped around one of the stones hurled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Percy A. Hill, at 747 E. 183d St., Bronx, Monday night.

Ferri was released in $1,000 bail. His companion, William Pizzolongo, twenty-five, of 2309 Crotona Ave., Bronx, was released in $500. Hearings were set for next Thursday. Two boys under sixteen were also held in the incident, charged with juvenile delinquency, but their names were not disclosed because of their age.

Emphasizing that he was not prejudging the case, Magistrate Hyman Korn said, "It would be a sad day if we permitted conditions to exist where we couldn't live in peaceful and dignified relations with our neighbors. No matter what our religious faith, we still believe in 'Love Thy Neighbor.'"

Magistrate Korn commended Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy as "the best we've ever had" and praised the police for the work in their case.

Commissioner Kennedy had deplored the stone-throwing as an "outrage" that would not be tolerated. Mr. and Mrs. Hill, both of whom work in a midtown hotel, had bought the two-story frame house in the predominantly white neighborhood on Feb. 27 for $12,450. A stone was thrown Sunday and three on Monday, breaking two windows.

The note that was thrown with a stone made the incident appear to be motivated by anti-Negro feeling. There have, however, been no similar outbreaks in the neighborhood where there are a few Negro families.

Rumor blamed for L.I. house bombing

Afro-American P. 3

Baltimore, Md.

NEW YORK — Mr. and Mrs. Kurt Masuck and children were awakened early Tuesday morning by the sound of glass crashing to the floor in the dinette of their Long Island home.

Sat. 6-30-56

A quick investigation by Mr. Masuck showed that someone had tossed a crude homemade kerosene bomb through the window in an attempt to set the house on fire.

Police blamed a rumor for the bombing which did little damage, due to the quick action to the Masuck family. Neighbors told police that it had been rumored the surburban home was to be sold to a colored person.

* * *

ONLY LAST Sunday, Mrs. Masuck told police that a man had stopped her on the street and threatened to kill her if the house was sold to a colored person.

Sal Loiacono, a neighbor, told police he was awakened by someone running across his lawn and after looking out, saw the Masuck's dinette window ablaze, and called the fire department.

* * *

THE MASUCKS quickly put out the small fire which was started by the bomb—a gallon jug of kerosene. A piece of wood and cloth on fire was tossed behind the jug, but failed to reach its destination.

Pilgrim Real Estate Agency bought the house last month but Mrs. Masuck said she did not know of any prospective colored buyers.

Who then was the woman identified as Mrs. Hill in the stoning pictures? Cora Thompson, confessed Hill in court—"a girl friend of mine."

It had been eight years since he had seen Josephine, Hill said. At that time he was paying her $15 a week in support.

"How long has it been since you paid?" the judge asked Hill.

"Oh, it's a long time," replied Hill, "about eight years."

"You owe her a lot of money," the judge said.

Will the NAACP spring to Hill's rescue and pick up the marital tab for their new Gotham martyr? Will the ersatz Mrs. Hill lose face because her own martyrdom was without benefit of clergy? For the next exciting episode in this true-to-life drama of the Negro in the North, be sure to watch for the next "Heroes Of The Segregation Fight" handbill issued by NAACP.

But we'll lay odds Hill won't rate any billing, not even in the small type reserved for Eleanor Roosevelt these days.

It seems that the Askelon press may have covered the story of the stoning of Percy Hill's home a little too thoroughly—at least from Hill's viewpoint.

Hill, a 44-year-old Negro elevator operator, won considerable notoriety when his Bronx home was bombarded with rocks May 6 and 7. Hill, with a woman whom he identified as his wife, moved into the predominantly white Belmont section last February. News accounts of the subsequent stonings carried pictures of Hill. He became a sort of martyr of non-existent Northern race friction.

Plain Dealer 1-14-56

CLEVELAND — John W. Pegg, attorney, and his wife, Dorothy, say they will move into their new home in the Shaker area when it is completed despite a bombing by hoodlums that did $2,000 damage Tuesday.

"The neighbors are fine people," according to Mr. and Mrs. Pegg. The neighborhood was shaken early Tuesday night by a deafening blast from a black powder time bomb that ripped off the garage doors of the new home and ripped the walls of another house nearby.

The Peggs' $40,000 home had been under construction for several months and was nearing completion when the bomb went off. The house is located at 13601 Corby Rd. near the Shaker-Cleveland boundary.

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. 1-21-56

CLEVELAND (NNPA) — The board of directors of a local loaning institution has adopted a resolution terming the recent bombing of a house being constructed for a colored couple as an "outrage."

John C. Pegg, prominent attorney, and his wife, the former Miss Dorothy Singleton of Washington, were building the house at 13601 Corby Rd., SE. Racial feeling is believed to be responsible for the act.

THE BOARD'S resolution also expressed its sympathy to Mr. and Mrs. Pegg and called on the mayor to keep police working on the case to catch the bombers.

Cleveland clergymen and neighbors helped clear away the debris. The Community Relations Board was enthusiastic about the cleanup work.

Lone Mother Defies Klan Cross Burners

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 8-25-56

By WILHELMINA JONES

COLUMBUS, Ohio — "I told them I wasn't going anywhere."

That is how Mrs. Gwendolyn Lawson, 30, explained how she routed a mob of some 100 persons who burned a 10-foot cross on her front lawn in a previously all white neighborhood Tuesday about midnight as her two children slept.

Mrs. Lawson and her husband, George, 806 Josephine Ave., said they will not move from their home in Rosary Addition.

Her story follows:

"It was about 11:45 p.m. I had just gone to bed a few minutes earlier. My friend, Mary Belle Graves, 32, staying with me while my husband was on vacation, rushed in the house crying, 'they're burning a cross in your yard.'

"I got up and looked out. A huge cross was burning in the yard and I saw about 25 or thirty people. A friend, Howard Pace, who was bringing Mrs. Graves home, grabbed the cross and threw it in the street.

* * *

"I RUSHED TO THE phone to call police. The phone was dead. Right away I thought they had cut the wires. I wasn't afraid, I just wanted to get the police or sheriff. I went next door to use the phone, their wires had been cut too.

"I told Mr. Pace that we would be alright and for him to drive somewhere and call the police. The crowd was pouring kerosene across the lawn in front of the house and set it afire. One of the men threw a rock through a front bedroom window.

The kids, there were several of them, began throwing rocks at the windows.

"I was afraid for the children, I thought the glass would cut them (the children, Gregory, 7, and Darlene, 8, were asleep under the window that was broken) but the screen kept the glass from falling on them. They slept through it all.

"THE CROWD WAS SAYING all kinds of bad names. I wasn't afraid. I kept my head and let them do all the name calling and use bad words.

"I told them I wasn't going anywhere. The crowd began to move back so I could not recognize them. They started backing down the street when the sheriff had appeared except for a few who claim they were bystanders.

"We moved here in April and were not through moving the furniture before three men, drinking, dropped in and asked us to sell. Then, afterwards, we received a letter with a picture of the Ku Klux Klan mobbing a place with a note warning us to move.

"In June, one evening, a group of boys threw fire crackers around the house all evening.."

* * *

MR. LAWSON, 33, a postal clerk returned home Friday morning. "I couldn't believe it would happen after we had been here so long. I was really surprised. Of course we are still upset but we are going to stay. We are not going to move."

The cross was made of heavy two by four timber with kerosene soaked rags and set on a stand resembling a Chrismas tree stand.

LT. WILLIAM A. CURRY of the Franklin County sheriff's office denounced the demonstration as "un-American and subversive," adding:

"Violence such as this might be expected in Russia, but not here."

Sheriff's officers, fire marshal's deputies and inspectors from the Franklin Township Fire Department have been working around the clock on an investigation since the incident took place.

Lieutenant Curry promised that a guard would be placed around the house to protect the family and its property if necessary.

* * *

ACCORDING TO MRS. LAWSON, whose husband was visiting friends in Connecticut at the time of the incident, she had the advice and assistance of the NAACP and the American Friends Service Commission in her determination not to sell the house.

The couple bought the property, one of about 50 in the Rosary Addition, "in an effort to get a better house." They paid $14,000 for the property and soon neighbors began offering them as much as $18,000 to sell and get out.

When they refused to sell, the campaign of harrassment began, culminating in the cross-burning Tuesday night.

'WE WON'T MOVE' is the way Mrs. George Lawson expressed herself as she examined the ends of her telephone line that was cut by a mob of 100 in Columbus, Ohio. The mob also burned a 10-foot cross on the front lawn of her new ranch style home.

But on Saturday, she heard a rock hit the side of the building. When she went outside she found a white youth of about 18 or 19 who told her he did not like Negroes, and threatened her, she said.

She said she thought about 15 or 20 youths took part Sunday in the window breaking. There was no repetition of the incident on Labor Day, and this morning her husband reported for work as usual at a pet hospital where he is employed.

Police reported that they were having a cruiser drive past the location as frequently as feasible to watch for any trouble that might develop.

'Get Out,' Note On Brick Tells Family of Negroes

Cleveland, Sept. 27 (AP)—Members of a Negro family who recently purchased a home in a predominantly white neighborhood on Cleveland's East Side reported to police that a brick with a note attached, telling them to get out, was thrown through their front window early today.

James Jones, 39, said he, his wife, and 21-year-old daughter were awakened by the crash, but were not endangered. The brick hit a Venetian blind and fell to the floor, he said.

Police said the note was printed in neatly blocked letters on white paper and read:

"Get out. Get out, you niggers. We don't want you here—or else."

Jones' wife, Mattie, 38, said the family was frightened by the incident, but is making no plans to move.

Four Escape Injury, Death

Sat. 3-31-56 38 Atlanta, Ga.

TULSA, Okla. — (INS) — Tulsa police Friday pressed an investigation into the dynamite bombing of a partially-built doctor's clinic as union leaders denied any knowledge of the incident, the fourth unsolved explosion laid to "labor trouble" in the city in the past two years.

Four persons in a nearby apartment building narrowly escaped death or injury when chunks of metal from the bomb, fashioned from cast iron pipe into which at least two sticks of dynamite were inserted, smashed through windows and walls early yeterday.

The clinic under construction for Dr. Charles M. Eitel suffered $3,000 to $5,000 damage when an eight-by ten foot picture window was blasted out, floors and wiring were ripped up and other glass was shattered.

A. B. Hawkins, contractor on the job, blamed the bombing on "labor trouble" although he said he had talked with "union officials of all kinds since I started this job and they had promised me nothing would happen."

The Tulsa Building Trades Council, central organization of the building crafts, obtained a district court injunction against Hawkins about a month ago when the project started, accusing him of violating a contract by use of non-union labor. However, a council spokesman said the injunction was never pressed because the unions felt the job was not big enough.

Dispatch P.3 Fri. 12-7-56 Oklahoma City

The mother of an 11-year-old boy said Wednesday she and her husband had no intention of moving out of the house at 630 N. E. 11th that they purchased about seven weeks ago. Mr. and Mrs. Eoudis Martin have been harassed with telephone calls and a threatening letter since moving into the block on N. E. 11th, which was previously all-white.

"The voice on the telephone is always that of a woman," Mrs. Martin said, "and I believe it is only one woman. Our neighbors are very nice to us," she said. "I don't have any idea who it could be."

38c

Mrs. Martin, who works at Douglass high school, said that they started getting threatening telephone calls before they moved into the 11th street house. They formerly lived at 731 ..... E. 7th, and she said as soon as they purchased the place but before they moved in, they got threatening calls.

She said they appealed to the police department for help when they first began getting the calls, but there was nothing they could do then. They appealed to the police again Tuesday, and police say an investigation is underway. Postal authorities have also been asked to see if a federal violation has resulted from the threting letter.

The letter was signed by the initials T. C. and T. L., and read: "Negro, you had better start getting out of this block if you know what is good for you."

For the past five years, Negroes have been quietly moving into what were formerly all-white neighborhoods without many unsavory incidents. There have been several siuts brought by some white families to restrict Negroes from the neighborhoods, but all were soon dropped, and the Negroes continued to move in.

CHARLESTON, S.C. — U.S. District Court Judge Ashton H. Williams left pending last Wednesday a ruling on whether to order facilities at Edisto Beach State Park integrated.

In substance, Judge Williams indicated that if the state park facility is reopened, the court will promptly order it integrated. So long as it remains closed, as ordered recently by the state legislature, no decision or order will be issued.

* * *

STATE ATTORNEY General T. C. Callison argued for dismissal of the civil rights case brought against the Forestry Commission and park superintendent, contending that the issue was now "moot."

John H. Wrighten, attorney, urged the court to issue a definite order, "one way or the other" in the interest of the five plaintiffs.

Judge Williams who last summer advised colored citizens not to take advantage of recent federal court rulings, again disagreed with integration rulings but said his court was bound to abide by these.

* * *

HE SAID that all colored citizens needed to do toward integration of the other state parks was to apply for admission.

Assistant Attorney General James S. Verner told the court the state will close parks and schools before it will allow integration.

Residents Want Store To Stay In White Hands

BEER QUESTION RAISED

Press. 3-15-56

A group of South Memphis white residents appeared before the City Licensing Commission yesterday to protest the sale of a sundry store to a prospective Negro buyer.

38c

The store at 471 East Olive, owned by Gilbert Wilbanks, has a license to sell beer to take out. Mr. Wilbanks told the commission he had been trying to sell the store for some time, but could not interest white buyers. He said S. W. Shaw, a Negro, had expressed interest in buying the store.

Police Chief J. C. Macdonald, commission member, interrupted to tell the big audience in the City Council chamber:

"What he wants to know is if he sells to a colored man would this commission transfer the beer license. My answer is no."

Round Of Applause

There was a big round of applause.

Commission Chairman Stanley Dillard told Mr. Wilbanks the commission had no jurisdiction over whether or not he sold his place, but added, "It's obvious the neighborhood out there doesn't want a colored man running the place." He advised Mr. Wilbanks to try to work out his problems.

E. A. Caldwell of 386 Bullington, speaking for the A. B. Hill Parent-Teacher Association, said the store is in a predominantly white neighborhood and there had been rumors the place was going to be sold to Negroes who planned to operate a "pool hall and beer tavern."

License Suspended

An indefinite suspension of the beer license held by Mrs. Nina Byrd, operator of Sonny's Place at 1283 South Lauderdale, was ruled after police testified Mrs. Byrd and her husband had a fight in the cafe.

The board suspended the beer license of Dupree's Dungeon Cafe, in the rear of 52 South Front, for two weeks because beer was sold to minors. The cafe is owned by Mrs. Dupree Thorpe.

Another two-week suspension was given Mrs. Bertha G. Engelberg, owner of New South Memphis Cafe at 2198 Florida, because of a fight in the cafe. Police said Mrs. Engelberg failed to call the police.

The commission set next Wednesday for a "full hearing" on the application of Clyde Thomas Brown to sell beer at 2161 Hernando Road. Mr. Brown appeared before the board, but Chief Macdonald pointed out "several hundred people" have protested the location. Commissioner Henry Loeb moved for the continuance "so both sides of the question can be heard."

Cross Burned In Front Of Home

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — A small cross about three feet high was burned in front of the home of Mrs. Helen Jackson, 1109 East Trigg avenue one day last week. The cross was soaked in kerosene.

Mrs. Jackson told police she knew nothing of the blaze in her front yard until told by a neighbor. "I've lived here a month with my husband and child and haven't had any trouble with the neighbors," she said.

"WE'RE GOING TO STAY." — Those were the remarks made by Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd G. Austin, who recently moved into a previously "all-white" block of North Judkins avenue in Fort Worth, Tex. Homeowners Are Tense As Negro Family Moves Into 'All-White' Block Of North Judkins Avenue

Call 8-1 Kansas City, Mo.

Fri. 9-7-56

FORT WORTH, Tex. — After the family of Lloyd G. Austin moved into a so-called "all-white" block of North Judkins avenue last week the white homeowners called a special meeting to map a plan of action against the Negro family.

38c

As groups of people gathered along the street, apparently to start a disturbance, police cars patroled the neighborhood.

Mrs. Marcia Austin, wife of Lloyd G. Austin, told newsmen, 'We're going to stay.' She said she and her husband and 17-month-old daughter had moved from 2102 East 4th. "That was an apartment, we wanted a home," she explained.

Circulars were printed and the first meeting was set for last Saturday and members were to have been contacted by phone as to where the meeting would be held.

The homeowner E. G. Brown said he had learned of the planned meeting when he noticed the knot of people in the street. Tensions have been pretty high," Brown said. "We've been trying to keep peace in the neighborhood, but it's pretty hard to do."

Brown said he didn't think there was any chance of court action. He said residents will "endeavor to reason" with the newcomers.

Mr. Austin said he had received two telephone calls prior to moving. One caller reminded him that a policeman lived directly behind their new home. The new home. The new family however flatly stated, "We're going to stay." "We always go to the Lord in these things."

Brown said he wasn't calling the meeting,' but said he knew there was to be one. "This problem is more upsetting than the one three years ago," he added. "It'll open up the whole thing.'

This same street was in the news in November, 1953, when several sticks of dynamite blasted the automobile of Lawrence Peters, Negro, after he moved into the 100 block of Judkins.

Police cars went to the area when the Austins notified officials that they planned to move in. The newcomers said they felt they had plenty of protection.

Police Chase Texas Mob Threatening Negro Home

Star Tele. 9-3-56 P.5-A

Washington Post

FORT WORTH, Tex., Sept. 3 (AP).—Police last night dispersed an angry, yelling mob of 150 whites who threatened a Negro family that had just moved into a previously all-white residential block in the Riverside section of Fort Worth.

38c

The crowd, yelling "Get those niggers," hung the effigy of a Negro in front of the North Judkins avenue home of Lloyd G. Austin who, sitting with a rifle at his front window, had kept the mob at bay most of the afternoon and night.

Shortly after the effigy was hung into place, a shot rang from the Austin home. When a youth claimed that the bullet had struck the hood of his car the crowd became a howling mob. Pop bottles were thrown at the house, but the crowd moved back when Police Chief Cato Hightower and a dozen officers arrived.

Cleared Area

Chief Hightower ordered all persons and cars cleared from the area. The mob quickly dwindled to a small group of about 35 persons that moved more than a block away beyond the police barricade.

The demonstrations started yesterday afternoon after a called meeting of residents of the neighborhood at the Riverside Elementary School. There E. G. Brown said the presence of the Negro family was part of a plot by the National Association of Colored People to get Negroes into the school district.

"The time has come for everybody to stick together and not let them come any further," Mr. Brown said. He cautioned against violence but said a peaceful demonstration would be all right to show the sentiment of the people.

Shouts of " let's go up and give those Negroes hell and talk about it later" interrupted his talk.

Mr. Brown then went to the Austin home to talk to the Negro and the demonstrators followed. While Mr. Brown and Mr. Austin conferred, the crowd of about 200, carrying signs "Stay Away Negro and Stay Alive" and "Put Me Down as No Nigger Lover," paraded in front of the house.

Offer Refused

Later Mr. Brown said he had offered to purchase the house from Mr. Austin on behalf of the citizens. He said Mr. Austin refused.

"I told them they were moving into a neighborhood where they would never be accepted as neighbors—and where they knew they were only causing trouble by staying," Mr. Brown said.

Mr. Brown also said he told Austin that he would not be a party to violence himself but would not guarantee the actions of other neighbors.

At the conclusion of the stalemate talk, a firecracker was tossed into Mr. Austin's car which was parked outside his garage.

Also taking part in the parley was Lawrence Peters, Negro center of a similar controversy in 1953.

While the milling mob kept out of range of Mr. Austin's rifle several houses down the street, a group of about 50 Negroes, in the other direction, some of them residents of adjoining block, stood and watched the demonstrators.

Doesn't Want Trouble

Most of the mob of 150 were teen-agers. A group of about 15 identified themselves as living in an area about a mile away.

Officers said they expected no immediate trouble but expressed fear there might be further disturbances later.

Newsmen and photographers, identifying themselves, asked Mr. Austin if they could come in and talk to him.

"I got nothing to say. I don't need any help. I am all right," he called out from the darkened house.

Earlier in the day he told reporters he was "trying to buy a home and live in peace. I don't want any trouble."

Fort Worth mob broken up by police

FORT WORTH, Tex., Sept. 3—(AP)—Police last night dispersed an angry yelling mob of 150 whites who threatened a Negro family that had just moved into a previously all-white residential block in the Riverside section of Fort Worth.

The crowd, yelling "get those niggers," hung the effigy of a Negro in front of the North Judkins home of Lloyd G. Austin, who, sitting with a rifle at his window, had kept the mob at bay most of the afternoon and night.

SHORTLY AFTER the effigy was hung into place, a shot rang from the Austin home. When a youth claimed that the bullet had struck the hood of his car the crowd became a howling mob. Pop bottles were thrown at the house, but the crowd moved back when Police Chief Cato Hightower and a dozen officers arrived.

Hightower ordered all persons and cars cleared from the area. The mob quickly dwindled to a small group of about 35 persons that moved more than a block away beyond the police barricade.

The demonstrations started yesterday afternoon after a called meeting of residents of the neighborhood at the Riverside Elementary School. There E. G. Brown said the presence of the Negro family was part of an "insidious plot" by the NAACP to get Negroes into the school district.

"The time has come for everybody to stick together and not let them come any further," Brown said. He cautioned against violence but said a peaceful demonstration would be all right to show the sentiment of the people.

SHOUTS OF "let's go up and give those Negroes hell and talk about it later" interrupted his talk.

Brown said later he offered to purchase the house from Austin but that the Negro refused.

During the afternoon the crowd dwindled to about 50 persons but grew rapidly again after dark.

WHILE THE milling mob kept out of range of Austin's rifle several houses down the street, in the other direction, a group of about 50 Negroes, some of them residents of adjoining block, stood and watched the demonstrators.

Only two officers were present when the effigy was hung. When Capt. J. D. Dunwoody arrived he told the rioters "we can't run that Negro out of the house, it's his home."

Most of the mob of 150 were teenagers. A group of about 15 identified themselves as living in an area about a mile away.

Hold Mob From Texas Residence

Daily World Tues. 9-4-56

Atlanta Ga.

FORT WORTH, Tex. — (INS) — Three squad cars, armed with tear gas bombs, patrolled a barricaded block in Fort Worth's Riverside section Monday to prevent further demonstrations against a Negro family which has moved into the all-white area.

Assistant Police Chief R. E. Tarvan said the patrol cars were instructed to "maintain order" and keep all non-residents out of the block. The action followed a near riot last night when some 300 persons milled about the Negro's home after an effigy was hung in the front yard.

Tarvan said there was no activity around the house Monday afternoon, with the exception of a few curiosity seekers who were kept behind the barricades by police.

DEMONSTRATION

The demonstration was ended quickly by police after the Negro, Lloyd G. Austin, fired a rifle shot into the mob. The bullet struck a car but no one was injured.

Daily World

Austin moved into the house Saturday with his wife and their infant daughter.

P.2

Meanwhile, a spokesman for the Riverside Merchants and Home Owners Association, E. G. Brown said more "peaceful demonstrations" will be staged outside the home. Brown soid the Riverside group would meet "to see what further action we can take to have the family moved out."

"INSIDIOUS PLOT"

He called the presence of the Negro family in the block part of an "insidious plot" by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to get Negroes into the school district.

After a meeting with Austin in the home Sunday night at which time Brown was turned down in his offer to purchase the house from the Negro, Brown told the demonstrators:

"The time has come for everybody in Riverside to stick together and not let them come any further."

A police officer at the scene was quoted as telling the mob: "We can't run the Negro out of the house, it's his home."

Negro's Gun Holds Mob at Distance 'Til Police Arrive

State Press P. 1

Fri. 9-7-56

Little Rock Ark.

In Fort Worth, Texas, police Sunday nite stopped a mob of angry whites who had gathered and threatened a Negro in his home. The Negro family had just moved into the home he bought in a previously all-white neighborhood in the Riverside section of Fort Worth.

The mob hung the effigy of a Negro in front of the home of Lloyd G. Auskins, who, sitting with a rifle at his front window, had kept the mob at a distance most of the afternoon.

Shortly after the effigy was hung by the mob, a shot came from the Negro's home. A youth in the mob, claimed that the bullet had struck the hood of his car. The mob let loose with all its fury, but stayed out of bullet range of the Negro's home. Pop bottles were thrown toward the house, and the mob never quieted down until Police Chief Cato Hightower arrived on the scene.

The police chief ordered all persons and cars cleared from the area. The mob of about 150 soon dwindled to about thirty who moved away from the police barricade.

The trouble started Saturday after a call meeting of residents of the neighborhood where the Negro had purchased a home and moved. E. G. Brown acting as spokesman for the residents, said the presence of the Negro family was part of a plot by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to get Negroes into the school district.

After Brown had worked the residents to mob actions, he then went to talk to Auskin. While he was in the house talking to the Negro, the mob put on a demonstration outside the Negro's home, but was careful and cautious enough to stay out of bullet range of the Negro's gun, and carefully watching some fifty Negroes who had gathered down the street a little farther.

Brown said he offered to purchase the home from Auskin, he finally agreed to sell. When the papers were drawn up for the sale, the Negro changed his mind and refused to sell.

Dallas Woman Will Sell Home To Negroes To 'Punish' Neighbors

Kansas City, Mo.

Cross Burned In Front Yard Of Big House

DALLAS, Tex. — (ANP) — In an attempt to scare Negroes out of buying the swank homes which Mrs. Cosette Newton offered for sale, white neighbors in the fashionable Highland Park area burned a cross here last Wednesday night in the front lawn of the 12-room house.

The cross-burning incident followed by several hours Mrs. Newton's announcement that she was offering the home for sale—to Negroes only.

The slightly-built woman, who holds five degrees including one to practice medicine, said she and her wealthy husband reached the decision to sell the property after conferring with representatives of the NAACP. Earlier Mrs. Newton announced that she had willed the property to the NAACP. But an NAACP spokesman in Dallas said his organization wanted nothing to do with the case and has adopted a "hands-off" policy

Battle Over Ship

Mrs. Newton and her neighbors have been battling 15 years because of a mock yacht in the backyard of the home. Neighbors said the ship —which measures 30 feet across the beam and 70 feet from stem to stern—was an "eyesore."

The ship was next to the Newton's private swimming pool. During the war Mrs. Newton entertained servicemen at dances. At war's end, she used it for an art gallery and to house flowers as well as to entertain her friends.

Despite a 10-foot fence Mrs. Newton erected around the ship, the case was taken to court.

Early in the 1950's, the neighbors sued to have the yacht torn down, contending it was a fire hazard. The Texas Supreme Court recently upheld a lower court ruling that the mock ship would have to be removed.

Mrs. Newton declined to say what she is asking for the house, which has been vacant since she and her husband moved out sometime ago. A neighbor, S. F. Cade, estimated property in the all-white suburb is worth from $40,000 to $60,000. She said the decision to sell to Negroes was not done in spite or bitterness.

Rifle Blast Causes 200 Whites To Flee

Houston Chron. Sat. 9-8-56

By JULIA SCOTT

FT WORTH — Following what almost erupted into a riot, Sunday, of whites who protested Negroes' entry into a white area, and the residents, a squad of Ft Worth policemen barricaded the recently purchased home of Lloyd G Austin, 209 N Judkins street, in the Riverside area, which is predominantly white (in that block).

The precautions were taken against interference of all visitors, especially the group of white citizens, members of the Riverside Merchant and Home Owners Association and their group, who organized in protest against Mr Austin, who moved in the community last Saturday afternoon.

Similar demonstration was exhibited in 1953 when Lawrence Peters moved into the Riverside area, 109 Judkins. At that time he was the first Negro to move in the area and whites attempted to intimidate him and his auto was bombed. He still lives at that address.

Mr Austin moved his wife and infant daughter into his newly acquired home. He moved from 2102 E Fourth street.

When the crowd gathered on Sunday afternoon, he was confronted by a group and the spokesman is reported to have asked him to sell the house and they would provide him with one in a "neighborhood where you be long". Mr Austin refused the offer. The crowd then became irrate and what was styled their "peaceful protest" changed to sneers the erection of caricatures an placards and even the hanging of an effigy.

Mr Austin armed himself with his rifle, after barricading himself in the house and "sat tight".

When some teenagers hung an effigy of a Negro in a tree in front of his house, he fired one shot in the direction of the crowd. None was hurt, but the shot reportedly hit the grill of a car belonging to one of the teenagers. Police then scattered the crowd and set vigilants around the house.

REPORTER REFUSED ENTRY

When this reporter arrived near the home of the Austins, police officers refused entry to the Austin home. One of the officers said, "the story is in the papers already, I don't see any need of you going down there". This reporter was very persistant, stating, "It is my privilege to get a story as well as any other reporter, and I notice, someone has talked with him." The officer replied "we have orders to keep everyone out, even OUR reporters."

At this point other officers gathered around peering at this reporters' credentials, which include identification cards from our paper, Dallas Sheriff and Dallas City Police Departments. An officer then stated they had no objections to an interview with Mr Austin, but that he would have to be contacted by telephone, and arrange to be met at some special place. This procedure was attempted, only to find out that Mr Austin did not have telephone service, as he had recently moved into the house.

Chief of Police Cato S Hightower was then contacted. He stated he had ordered no visitation made in that area. When asked the question of others getting in, he explained the other reporters went in Sunday, but since the barricades were erected no one had been permitted to go in.

He said, "things are pretty hot down there", and explained he took such measures to protect all the people and stated he felt any visitation in that area might be misunderstood.

TEEN-AGERS RIDE NEAR SCENE

While visiting other residents in the controversal area, several car loads of teenagers were seen driving down to the barricades and slowly turning around. They made no attempt to get out of the cars, but turned at the line of squad cars and paddy wagons. The officers sat calmly by their jugs of ice water as this was repeated several times. At intervals small groups of Negroes, both male and female, attempted to go into the forbidden area, but were immediately stopped and turned around.

The whites told reporters that they would take some measures to get Mr Austin out of the neighborhood, according to repots.

Mob Chased From Ft Worth Negro's Home

Informer p. 5
Houston Tex.
Sat. 9-15-56

FORT WORTH — A crowd of some 250 whites gathered again at the home of Lloyd G Austin Tuesday, the third day of demonstrations in protest of the Negro moving into Riverside, once an all-white neighborhood.

There were rumors that the mob, angry because Mr Austin chased them with a rifle shot Sunday evening, planned to dynamite the home. But police chased the crowd before such plans materalized.

Mr Austin's home is just a block away from the home of Lawrence Peters, the first Negro to move into the community back in 1953. Mr Peter's automobile was bombed by protesting whites after a similar demonstration such as the one last night.

A group of white citizens tried Monday to get Mr Austin to sell and he agreed to do so. Later, he changed his mind.

E G Brown, a leader of the Riverside Merchant and Home Owners Association, said that his group will try to get Mr Austin and his wife fired from their jobs unless they move.

Brick Wall to Segregate Housing Project

Courier Sat. 11-24-56 P. 2

HOUSTON, Tex.—"We will build a brick wall to divide the two sections, both psychologically and psysically," said Fred Lucas, spokesman for a group responsible for suggesting that Negro and white families in a housing project be separated.

Pittsburgh Pa. 38

The Houston Housing Authority approved the measure unanimously although the development receives annual funds from the Federal Government.

The Public Housing Authority, a Federal agency which will grant about $404,870 to the HHA this year, said it would not necessarily hold back funds from Houston because of the "segregation wall."

The HHA also said it would attempt to increase white tenancy in the project from the present 64 per cent to 100 per cent.

IF THIS EFFORT FAILS, Lucas said, the white families will be moved into the west half of the project and Negroes would be admitted to the east half with the two parts separated by a wall "big enough to do the job."

Marshall Amis, regional director of the Public Housing Authority, said in Ft. Worth: "We would not necessarily hold back funds from the segregation arrangement. In a similar arrangement in Gilmer, Tex., we did not approve of segregation housing and turned them down on continued Federal funds.

"I don't recall the details of the Gilmer thing, that is to say, I don't recall our explicit reasons for denying them funds, but I do believe it was a matter of public relations."

FAR FROM TRUE When a sign appeared in front of 1512 W. 40th street, in the Lamberts Point section of Norfolk, declaring that Negroes would be unwelcomed as neighbors, white residents of the street were quick to say it was not the general feeling of the neighborhood. Some went so far as to say the offensive language of the sign spoke only for the man who put it in front of his house.

38c Va

The sign (arrow, inset) reads: "Notice. The people living on this street are unhappy because colored want to move in here with us. We like to live to ourselves. We cannot be happy in any other invivement (sic)."

The fact is that white residents are willing to have Negroes as buyers and neighbors, and do not approve of the sign.
